MBTA picks train contractor

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It may be too soon to start selling train tickets but restoration of the Greenbush line appears relatively assured now a preferred contractor for the project has been selected whose construction bid is within estimates.

"It's a green light for Greenbush," said state Rep. Joseph C. Sullivan, D-Braintree, who is House chairman of the joint Committee on Transportation. "The cost associated on restoration of the line looks to be a firm number and one that will achieve the result of Greenbush for the South Shore."

Michael Mulhern, acting general manager of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, said the preferred contractors are a joint venture consisting of Cashman Construction of Boston and Balfour Beatty, an international company, which bid $252 million for construction.

The MBTA expects to spend another $182 million to purchase train cars, pay for police details and construction-related support. The figure includes $25 million in a contingency fund, bringing the total cost of the project to $434 million – about $6 million less than recent project estimates. The construction bid includes the underpass at Weymouth Landing and the tunnel

Lobstermen want to be heard

Harbor issues may affect livelihood

Most of the time, Cohasset lobstermen don't make a lot of noise. When many of us are still sleeping, they quietly put out to sea to go about their work hauling in the tons of lobsters that make their way not only into local kitchens and restaurants but to those across the country as well.

Therefore, few residents may realize how critical the lobster industry — which dates back some 100 years — is to this small seaside town. Not only did the size of the local lobster fleet play a key role in obtaining federal money for the dredging project in the mid-1990s, but also Cohasset's is one of the top ports in the state for amount of lobsters landed annually.

So when lobstermen show up at a Planning Board meeting to express their concerns — they hope someone will pay attention.

Worrisome to the town's some 35-registered lobstermen is shrinking access to the harbor, in particular, any more strain on the slim parking availability near the dock at Government Island.

To that end, several lobstermen and members of the Harbor Committee tried to drive the point home to the Planning Board last month that a proposed kayak shop at the Mill River Marine site might further strangle an already tight parking situation.

Bill Kelly, a lobsterman who fishes out of Cohasset harbor, sees how some are worried about the situation.

"With all the trucks that are there already, the parking lot is pretty much filled to capacity," he said in a telephone interview. "Guys are concerned customers of the kayak shop will take up all the spots."

Planning Board member Peter Pratt said the presence of a Massachusetts Lobstermen Association representative at the

The ground could be frozen but spirits will be warm at noon on Jan. 17 when the groundbreaking for the new library will take place at the old Osgood School.

Patience Towle, library trustee chairman, said she is thrilled the groundbreaking is only weeks away.

"We're very excited because this is the first real step to the building process," she said. "It's taken us four years to get here and I'm so glad we have arrived."

Towle said she would give a short speech at the ceremony along with Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed. The event is expected to last only 15 minutes and will take place rain or shine followed by a "dutch treat" lunch at the Red Lion Inn.

Pre-sale of graves an option

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

No one likes to think about dying — but when a loved one does pass away, it's a difficult time for the family. For Cohasset residents that sensitive time has been further complicated for the past decade by having to deal with buying a burial plot after the fact for a deceased family member because of the scarcity of available graves in town.

"It takes away the dignity of the whole situation and we're trying to change that now."

— Glenn Pratt,
Cemetery Committee

But thanks to the recent $700,000 addition to Woodside Cemetery, that's about to change.

The Cohasset Cemetery Committee is getting ready to offer graves for sale on a pre-need basis for the first time in ten years, says committee chairman Glenn Pratt.

Plans are to keep the "open feeling" of Woodside, which was constructed in 1906, so there will be a combination of flat and upright markers in the expanded section, Pratt said. The Woodside addition

Ellms Meadow wells to come back to life

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Water Commission is planning for a "rainy day."

The town has enough water to serve its current needs but unforeseen circumstances — a severe drought or even an act of terrorism — could put the vital resource in jeopardy.

That's why the Water Commission has decided to reactivate the Ellms Meadow wellfield off James Lane rather than abandon it altogether.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said he expects construction on six new wells at the site to last about a month with work being completed by mid-February. The work needs to be done in the winter when the ground is frozen per order of the state Department of Environmental Protection because of the concern for the spotted turtle, which is an endangered species.

He said it has taken approximately three years to get all the permits necessary to start construction on the wells, which are expected to generate approximately 200,000 gallons of water a day. The cost for the wells will be paid for out of the current water rates, McNabb said.

McNabb said the extra water from Ellms Meadow would be used as a back up in case of an emergency situation.

"If there was a problem at the Lily Pond plant or a fire or something, this would be a great back up source," he said. He added even terrorism is a concern. The well water, which only needs fluoridation and chloride, does not go through the treatment plant and is pumped directly into the nearest water pipe.

The average daily demand is 650,000 gallons a day but in the summer the maximum daily demand can go as high as 1.7 million gallons a day. The town's current surface water supply, which is the Aaron River Reservoir and Lily Pond, has the maximum capacity of 3.5 million gallons a day. The Lily Pond plant can treat up to about 2.6 million gallons per day, McNabb said.

"We can never have too much water."

— Water Commission Chairman
John McNabb

He said if the town decided to not reactivate the wells, "the town would have lost a valuable source of water."

Last month the Water Commission voted to award the T.J. Ogden Company the contract for the installation of the six new Artesian wells in which the natural pressure of the water pumps it up the pipes. Ogden was the only bidder at $132,930 which was close to the engineer's estimate of $125,000. Funds for the project were authorized at the Nov. 5 Special Town Meeting.

McNabb said the second phase of the project is to replace the pump and pump house. Plans are to ask annual Town Meeting for $200,000-$300,000 – which would also be covered out of current water rates. The pump house was originally built in 1897 and was used up until 1995 when the pipe connecting the wells to the distribution system broke.

"The Water Commission was then dealing with the water emergency and had bigger problems to deal with and decided to leave the wellfield for a later time," McNabb said about the water distribution crisis of the mid-90s.

"All water supplies are valuable and should be protected and preserved," McNabb said. "By reactivating the Ellms Meadow well field we will help protect Cohasset's ability to provide sufficient water for firefighting and domestic consumption." Ellms Meadow got its name form the name of the family that owned the land before it was turned over to the town in 1897 to build the well field.

The Sohier Street wells will also be reactivated after they are relocated away from the Greenbush rail bed next year. The relocation costs will be reimbursed by the MBTA. McNabb said the Sohier Street wells are 50 feet from the rail line and need to be at least 400 feet away. The Sohier Street wells will produce an estimated 200,000 gallons per day.

"We can never have too much water," McNabb said. "The reactivated wellfields will produce about has space for 1800 graves, counting vaults for urns.

Residents are also allowed to buy a "combination of up to four spots," Pratt said.

The combination can include four regular graves, two regular graves and one double-depth grave (for two caskets), or two regular graves and two niches in a columbarium wall for cremation urns.

The cost of a full-casket burial in a grave that would have an upright stone monument is $1850 (not including the cost of the stone). Full-casket burial in a grave with a flush marker is $1500, Pratt said. Full casket-burial in a double-depth grave is $3,800 that includes the cost of the $800 cement vault, which has already been installed. A vault in a columbarium wall for two urns is $2,500. There can be a maximum of four urns in one vault for $3,500.

Interested residents should contact Mary Snow at the Department of Public Works at 781-383-0273 to set up an appointment.

Later this month, the Cemetery Committee will send a brochure to all the households in town with information about purchasing graves.

"That way all families in town will be aware of what we have," Pratt said.

Cohasset is able to finance the $700,000 cost of expanding Woodside over a ten-year period through a home-rule petition rather than the five years allowed under state financing laws. The town needs to sell about 45 graves a year to pay the mortgage. Currently the town conducts about 35 burials a year including those at Central Cemetery, which is privately owned.

Pratt said people would no longer have to go outside Cohasset to buy graves on a pre-need basis.

"I think there is a pent-up demand in town for pre-need sale because for ten years we've shut that option off for the town," he said. "That was the way we had to do it — only permitting people to buy when they needed to. It takes away the dignity of the whole situation and we're trying to change that now."

A portion of the sales price of the graves goes into a perpetual-care account whose earnings are used to maintain the cemetery.

There will be a dedicated space at the DPW office where residents can sit down and look over the cemetery plans.

Pratt said there are about 400 standard graves available at the Beechwood Cemetery; some of which are available in groups of four. Graves at Beechwood are $725, he said. Pratt said Beechwood isn't as sought after as Woodside, perhaps because it's on a busy corner. But he said the expanded section of Beechwood overlooks the Aaron River and the meadows there.

Local lobstermen want to be heard meeting suggests the fishermen are very upset.

"The representatives usually go to Beacon Hill or down to D.C.," he said. "Only if they are really concerned about a matter would they come to a Cohasset Planning Board meeting.

Peter Roy, whose preliminary plans for the Mill River boatyard site include a kayak shop, has not made a formal application to redevelop the area. Roy's spokesman Linda Shropshire said in a previous interview the kayak shop is not a critical part of the redevelopment plans.

Roy has shown support for local lobstermen by incorporating the existing lobster pound at the Mill River site into the plans. And Atlantica restaurant, which he also owns, is known for featuring local lobster on its menu.

So the kayak shop might just go away. But, nevertheless, the lobstermen want their voices heard on harbor matters and a little consideration for the significance of the health of the industry in town.

"The lobster industry has always been the backbone of Cohasset," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "It is a very, very important aspect of the town."

Harbormaster John Winters says lobstering provides local jobs.

"It has been around for so long, it provides quite a livelihood for many in town," he said. The industry brings money into town from lobster sales as well as indirectly through sale of marine supplies, fuel and bait, boat repair and tourism.

According to Bill Adler, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Lobstermen Association, Cohasset is currently in the top 15 ports in the state out of 54. Gloucester is the number one port in Massachusetts. These statistics are based on the amount of pounds of lobster that is caught in a port in a year.

Cohasset provided nearly half of a million pounds of lobster in 1999 — the latest year statistics are available.

The state of Massachusetts caught nearly 16 million pounds of lobster in 1999, which ranks it as the number two producer of lobster in the country. Maine continuously has the highest catch, and Canada has the biggest lobster industry in the world.

"It's a big business," said Adler. "Lobster is the most valuable marine animal in the state. It employs more people than any other marine industry."

The viability of the local lobster industry played a major role in getting state and federal funds to dredge the harbor, Pratt said. Without dredging, the harbor would become too shallow and boats would run aground.

Like the airlines and tourism, the lobster industry has been hurt by the events of Sept. 11. Currently, the price of lobster per pound is around $3.60 — up from a low of $2 within a week after the terrorist attack.

"That was the lowest price the lobster industry has seen in more than a decade," said Adler of the lobstermen's association, adding demand for lobster dropped drastically.

"Lobster is a celebration food," he said. "No one was in the mood for celebrating for some time."

Winters said the drop in price reflected the amount of lobsters that are shipped out of state. With the cancellation of many flights, the lobsters remained at the wholesaler.

Kelly said regardless of the price the lobstermen will still be out there. "I do not look at the money," he said. "To be a lobstermen you really need to enjoy it."

On an average day Kelly, who has been a lobsterman since 1977, said he will pull about 200 traps averaging about 60 pounds each. When he comes into the harbor with his daily catch, he sells all his lobsters to a wholesaler.

Kelly said despite local pressures and the recession, being a lobsterman is a great way of life.

"I love the independence," he said. "There is something to be said for a steady paycheck, but in the grand scheme of things I can deal with having a fluctuating income."

Town waiting on new chief

Search committee still interviewing

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The holiday season has provided a brief respite in the search for a new police chief.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the search committee, which was organized to determine the finalists for the position, took the holidays off and resumed interviewing candidates after the first of the year.

The new chief will replace Brian Noonan, who will retire after 28 years in the police department, nine as chief.

Haddad said the search committee is interviewing 10 to 12 candidates out of the 54 applications the town received. There are two internal applicants.

After the committee has completed its interviewing process, it will submit a list of finalists to Haddad. Under Cohasset's Town Manager Act, Haddad will make the final decision on the chief appointment although selectmen can veto his choice.

"I expect that anyone I pick on the list will be very qualified for the position," he said.

Haddad said he will interview the finalists, and take them before various town committees and groups, such as the selectmen, the school committee and police union, before choosing a new chief.

"I hope to introduce a new chief to town before annual Town Meeting," he said. While he previously thought a new chief would be named shortly after New Year's, he said the holidays have delayed the process. Otherwise, there have been no setbacks.

Noonan will stay on board until a new chief is appointed, Haddad said.

The salary could depend on the range the candidates are seeking and next year's budget might have to be adjusted accordingly, he said. Noonan's salary last year was about $70,000.

Haddad said there are many qualities he is looking for in the new chief.

"I'm looking for someone who has experience managing others and someone that is a proven professional," he said.

> "I expect that anyone I pick on the list will be very qualified for the position."
> — Town Manager Mark Haddad

He added he wants someone who could handle public relations and also someone who was willing to work in conjunction with the school department to better relations between the youths and the officers. Haddad is also looking for an applicant who has experienced both good and bad times so they know how to handle both situations.

"Essentially, I want someone who will serve the town the best," he said.

The process started in September when Chief Noonan announced his retirement. Haddad said he felt this was an extremely important appointment so he formed a committee to help him with the choice. The search committee includes, Norwell Police Chief Bob Galvin, Duxbury Town Manager Rocco Longo, Selectmen Michael Sullivan and Ronnie McMorris, Rob Spofford who is the school building committee chairman, and Cohasset residents Michael Coyne and Lisa Bumstead.

"It was tough to decide who to put on the board," Haddad said. He added everyone on the committee brings a wealth of qualities to the table. He said the committee has asked the applicants a wide range of questions in order to determine their qualifications.

"They have not focused on one area," Haddad said.

Noonan, who took over from former chief Joseph Kealey, was selected from a field of six finalists for the job back in 1993. Other in-house candidates at the time included Sgt. Robert Jackson, who is the current police prosecutor, and former Sgt. Richard Abbadessa, who retired several years ago.

Ellms Meadow wells to come back to life

400,000 gallons a day which will serve us well as an emergency supply in case the treatment plant goes down and if we can't get water from Scituate or Hingham during a serious drought."

McNabb said the maximum said demand in town may get closer to 2.6 million gallons a day in a few years with increased development and use of lawn sprinklers.

Currently the Water Commission is in negotiations to potentially sell 500,000 gallons of water per day to Mass-American Water Company which serves Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset.

McNabb said the potential water sale has nothing to do with reactivating the well field.

"It's merely a coincidence," he said. "Even without the wells being installed, we would be able to make the sale."

Harbor Walk public workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is hosting a public workshop on proposed Harbor infrastructure and streetscape improvements on Thursday, Jan. 17 at 7:30 p.m. at the Saint Anthony's Parish Center. The Cecil Group, and urban landscape architectural firm, will present ideas to improve pedestrian and bicycle accessibility and the linkages between public access points around the waterfront. Discussion items will include sidewalk and railing designs; defined parking lanes; pedestrian scale lighting; and the possible inclusion of designated bike lanes. For additional information contact the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation office located at 87 Elm St., 781-383-2449.

Hannah Beggan helps make a wish come true

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HAPPY NEW YEAR, COHASSET!

I hope that everyone had a wonderful Christmas and that you all enjoyed family and friends. The year 2002 is here and lets hope that it is filled with joy, happiness and hope for all. I am sure that many of us have made resolutions for this upcoming year and really hope that many of mine can be accomplished. My biggest one that I really want to come true(aside from the regular lose weight, gain financial stability etc.) is to really take the time and efforts to enjoy my family and friends to the fullest.

NEW ARRIVAL

Deborah and Brad Thomas, along with big brother Will have a wonderful new addition in their family. Graves Page Thomas (Gray) was born on Dec. 9, 2001 weighing in at 8 lbs. 5 oz. and was 21 ins. long. Little Gray's grandparents are Pam Page of Palo Alto, Calif. and William Leckonby of Portola Valley, Calif. His paternal grandparents are Penny and Bob Thomas of Osprey, Fla. and Chester, Nova Scotia. Congratulations to all of you on the news of this special little person.

AN INSPIRATION!

Cohasset native Hannah Beggan, daughter of Carol and Robert of Sankey Road, led up a project that is so inspiring. Hannah attends Saint Michael's College and along with five other students, raised more than $5,000 for the Make-A-Wish Foundation in Vermont. These six students were honored on Nov. 15 where they received a plaque commemorating their gift. As a result of the efforts of these students, a 13-year-old boy received a laptop computer that he had wished for to use while he is recuperating from a heart transplant operation. This was such a wonderful accomplishment that is really what life is all about! Thank you Hannah and the rest of your group for this unselfish and inspiring project.

ALUMNI FACE OFF!

The THIRD ANNUAL ICE HOCKEY ALUMNI GAME will be held this Sunday, Jan. 6 at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham. The first game begins at 12:20 with a second game scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. More than 30 alumni representing the Cohasset Varsity Ice Hockey Program from 1972 through 2001 have registered to face-off against the 2001-2002 Varsity Team. The Cohasset Hockey Boosters invite the public to join in the fun on Jan. 6. Admission is $4 adults, $2 children. A raffle for tickets to a great sporting event will also be held. This is a great way for families and friends to spend a Sunday together, watch some great competition and raise some funds for a great group. See you there!

VO-TECH HONORS

Two local students were named to the honor roll at the South Shore Vocational Technical High School. Kristen James is a sophomore taking electronic shop and made the high honor roll for the 4th term in a row! Kristen's parents, Terry and Brian, are so proud. Also making honor roll, was Elyse Portanova, a freshman at the school. Both of you should be extremely proud of these accomplishments. Fantastic work.

CALENDAR RAFFLE

Speaking of Hockey, the Second Annual Holiday Calendar Raffle is over for this year and some great prizes have already been won by some 31 lucky winners. Each day, a member of the Hockey Boosters brought the box of raffle stubs to the merchant who donated the raffle prize for that day and the merchant drew the winning ticket. The prize is personally delivered to the winner by the Hockey Booster. Everyone involved had great fun both drawing and winning the prizes.

The last two weeks of lucky winners were: Dec. 15-Nike "Tiger Woods" Sunglasses, Strecker Eye Care won by Peter Sandlbom, Scituate; Dec. 16-$50 GC, Bernards Restaurant won by Joanne Boyne; Dec. 17-$50 GC from Stop and Shop won by John Power of Pembroke; Dec. 18, $50 GC from Cohasset Greenery won by Rita and Don Paiva; Dec. 19-$25 GC to The Good Sport plus two large cheese pizzas, Cohasset House of Pizza won by Dana and MaryAnn Cushing; Dec. 20-$50 savings bond from Fleet Bank won by Eva DeWitz of Boston; Dec. 21-Cut, Blow dry & Make up from Rudolph Adamo Salon won by Lynn Previte; Dec. 22-$25 GC Really Great Pizza won by Ron Wheatts of Scituate; Dec. 23- A one month membership to Fitness First won by the Flibotte Family; Dec. 24-a $100 discount on full vehicle detailing, Cohasset Collision Center won by Irene Ryan of Milton; Dec. 25-$100 from Pilgrim Cooperative Bank won by Teresa Farrow of Stoughton; Dec. 26-$50 in dry cleaning from Dependable Cleaners won by Cary Coyne from New Hampshire; Dec. 27-$25 GC to Josephs Hardware won by Joe Gallagher; Dec. 28-$25 in dry cleaning to Aveni Cleaners won by Marty Corry; Dec. 29-Lube, Oil and Filter from Cohasset Filling Station plus a $20 GC from Shaws won by Richard Holland of Plymouth; Dec. 30-$25 in dry cleaning from Cohasset Plaza Cleaners won by Ann and Kevin O'Connor and on Dec. 31- a $100 GC to The Atlantica won by Laurie Greenip.

Well, that's the end of the 2001 Holiday Calendar Raffle! The Varsity and Junior Varsity Hockey Teams sincerely appreciate the local merchants and the Cohasset townspeople who supported this fundraising effort and wish to take this opportunity to extend warm wishes for a healthy and peaceful New Year. Please come watch the Skippers skate their way to the States this year!

PIÑATA PARTY

Another event happening this Sunday, Jan. 6 at 2 p.m., is the Annual Piñata Party held at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Entertainment will be provided by Mr. Suspenders. This is another fantastic way for families to bring in the New Year and is sure to be a lot of fun.

PHILLIPS HONORS

Kara Gaughen, daughter of Robert and Margaret Gaughen, was named to the Phillips Academy Honor Roll for winter term. Phillips Academy, also known as Andover, requires a 5-point grade point average on a 6-point scale to be named to the honor roll.

THAYER MIDDLE SCHOOL STARS

Catherine M. Ernst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Ernst; Hannah S. Levin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adam L. Levin and Joseph M. Rosano, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mario R. Rosano, all were named to the Thayer Middle School Honor Roll for the third trimester. Congratulations all of you on these great honors.

PRIME TIME

Wow, Georgine and Bruce Butman were recently here for a visit and had some news to share with us all about their daughter Amelia. Amelia has been chosen to appear on 20/20 and Prime Time Live! The story will focus on talented and gifted children and how they struggle with perfectionism. Bruce and Georgine are so proud of Amelia who strives for the best in everything she does and then achieves it by being herself and as her mom says, "being a blonde." They have promised to let us all know when the show will air.

That is it for this week. Please make sure to get me all your news, event information and photos no later than Monday mornings by noon. All photos can be dropped off at Cohasset News in an envelope marked, "Cohasset Mariner, Around Town." or they can be scanned and sent to me.

French say 'thanks' to Cohasset veteran

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

John Coe, 23 Pond St., got a surprise in the mail last month — a thank you note from France.

Coe, a glider pilot who was a lieutenant in the Army Air Corps during World War II, has no idea how the French government obtained his name, but he received a certificate in the mail from the French General Counsel thanking him for contributing to the liberation of France.

As it turns out, the French government worked with state veterans affairs offices and veterans associations in identifying eligible veterans, who are receiving special certificates as part of its two-year "Thank You America" campaign. The certificates are meant to express the gratitude of the French people to the soldiers who participated in the Normandy landing and liberation of France, on French territory and in French territorial waters and airspace, between "D-Day" June 6, 1944 and May 8, 1945.

During World War II gliders were used in much the same way helicopters are employed now. The gliders were used to transport artillery, men and jeeps. Coe said flying the gliders wasn't the most difficult part of the job — it was landing them.

"Because there are no engines on the glider, the wind has its way with you," he said.

Coe said he originally wanted to be a pilot but his eyesight was not up to standards. So, he signed up to be a glider pilot and joined 3,000 others who flew the gliders during the war. He also served as a co-pilot on the C-47 plane., which towed the gliders before cutting them loose.

The gliders he flew measured 48-feet long, 12-feet high, and had an 84-foot wingspan, and weighed more than 3,500 pounds.

In his first mission a few days after D-Day, Coe flew his glider into southern France. After being shot at by German soldiers, Coe crashed into the countryside.

"Fortunately, I was the only one hurt," he said. The 13 soldiers on board walked away from the crash unscathed. After landing, glider pilots became part of the infantry and Coe was on the ground in Germany for four weeks. Coe, who was only 20 when he enlisted, said the experience was incredibly frightening. He flew on more missions in Holland and Germany.

His time in the service took Coe all over the world including Africa, Sicily, England and Western Europe.

Coe was heavily decorated. He received the Decorative European Theatre Ribbon with eight battle stars and one arrowhead; he also was awarded an Air Medal with two clusters and his unit received a Presidential Unit Citation with one cluster. Clusters are awarded for a second and subsequent issuance of the same decoration.

After the war, Coe went to college on the GI Bill and worked as a manufacturer's representative.

Coe, who is originally from New Jersey, has lived in Cohasset for more than 30 years with his wife, Marcia. His daughter Mary and son Charles went through the Cohasset school system. Charles is now a major in the Army serving in the medical service and is currently stationed in Germany.

"I have to salute my own son now," Coe joked.

Coe is an active member on the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs, is involved with the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library, and volunteers his time at South Shore Hospital. He said he thoroughly enjoys the town.

"It is truly a great place to live," he said.

Chapter opens for new library get an estimate on the number.

Town officials, residents and anyone else, who has a vested interest in the new library is invited, Towle said.

Actual library construction will start Jan. 4, according to Town Manager Mark Haddad.

The library has begun transferring items from the old Paul Pratt Library to the new one. The weathervane has been removed, and Towle said the murals that line the rotunda of the museum are currently being photographed so replicas can be installed in the new library.

Other items being moved into the new library include computers, books and shelving. Towle said the new library would probably not take as many periodicals because of the advent of the internet.

"The internet has made it so easy to access old newspapers," she said.

Towle said Stephen May, who has expertise on similar projects, will serve as clerk of the works. "He's terrific," she said. "We are happy to have him on board."

"It's taken us four years to get here and I'm so glad we have arrived."

— Patience Towle, library trustees chairman

Simon Tempest who is the project manager for the school building projects, will also join the library building team as project manager on a part-time basis.

"We are glad to have his expertise," Towle said.

Haddad said he is receiving plenty of inquiries about the sale of the Paul Pratt Library and will put the building out to bid in February.

Haddad has set a minimum bid of $700,000. This is the amount of money the town is counting on to help pay for the new library. At projected cost of $3.9 million to turn the old Osgood School into a new library — the anticipated $700,000 from the sale of the old building is crucial to finance the project, Haddad said. If the building is sold for more money, it will reduce the amount the town needs to borrow.

The old library property's assessed value for fiscal year 2002 is $928,500, which includes the 24,630-square-foot building and little over half of an acre of land, which is zoned residential. The building could be constructed as a library back in 1903 because it was built before zoning regulations.

EDITORIAL

Thanks for speaking up

Before 2002 gets too far along, we still have some important 2001 business to attend to.

Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter to the Cohasset Mariner in 2001.

A few wrote thank you notes to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject, putting pen to paper to share your views with your fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

So here at the Mariner, we salute the following citizens:

Connie Afshar, Maureen Alcott, Dick Avery and others for vote YES on the CPA, Mark Bell, Susan and Bill Bell, Diane Benson, Jonah A. Berger, Trish Berube, Michael C. Betts, Lincoln P. The editorial pages of the Cohasset Mariner belong to you. It's where you can speak out or just say thank you to a citizen or group that went beyond the call of duty.

Sometimes it takes a good dose of courage to let your voice be heard, but we think it's worth it. Often one voice is all the inspiration needed to propel others to action.

Last year, the Cohasset Mariner received 172 letters from 138 different people, groups or organizations.

To those of you that have thought about writing and haven't, please reconsider. To those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing!

There are lots of weeks to go in the New Year — which will be filled with events, decisions, happenings and controversy.

Let us hear what you think in 2002..

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

No official SPWA position

TO THE EDITOR

This letter is in response to the article "Pond wants Hull to cleanup its act" Dec.20, 2001. (regarding Hull selling sewer capacity to a private developer). There are three clarifications to the article that need to be made.

1. There was not a vote on the issue of a new development on Jerusalem Road taken at the December quarterly meeting; therefore, there is not an official Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) position as the opening sentence of the article might imply.

2. At the meeting there were assertions that seemed to say "The spirit of what the residents of Hull voted on is being violated." However, I am relatively new to Hull, was not present during the vote, and did not personally make the assertions.

3. The heading of the article may be appropriate for this specific instance but is not balanced. The Hull Board of Selectmen and other Hull town officials have many times in the past taken the initiative regarding Straits Pond issues.

SPWA was formed two years ago. According to our mission statement SPWA's primary goal is the restoration of the ecological health and beauty of Straits Pond. To this end the SPWA is interested in working in a cooperative way with both the Town of Hull and the Town of Cohasset. We have initiated and obtained grants to improve the health of the Pond, organized spring fall cleanups of the Pond and its shoreline in Hull, Cohasset, and Hingham, arranged bird walks, etc. We strive to develop a community of interested citizens to participate in this endeavor.

House tour support

TO THE EDITOR

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset would like to thank all the people who help to make the recent "Christmas Reflections" house tour a success. It takes many hands and willing hearts to present this event. We are truly grateful for the support of Garden Club members as well as other community organizations.

One of the unsung heroes of this event is the South Shore Community Center. Program Director, Stephanie Church, and her staff, Edvia Yocum, Helene Devlin, and Katherine Mirarchi, cheerfully sold tickets to the house tour and fielded questions about the event, in addition to their already busy schedule. We are fortunate to have this organization as an integral part of our town. The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club joined in the fun, providing hostesses at some of the homes. We truly appreciate this spirit of intra-organizational cooperation.

Ann Pompeo, president, Community Garden Club of Cohasset
Judy Dickstein and Lee Drew co-chairmen, Christmas House Tour Committee

Cholesterol tests for young adults

Cholesterol screening for ages 18-25 will be held at the Cohasset Middle High School cafeteria on Jan. 3 from 12:30-4 p.m. and 5-7 p.m. Twenty percent of adults between 18 and 25 who have high cholesterol which can contribute to premature heart disease. Also free, healthy snacks and informational literature. Screening is sponsored by Hingham Institution for Savings.

Light a star on the memory tree

Remembering, in a tangible way will enrich the holiday season, the joy our loved ones have shared with us in seasons past.

Commemorative lights shine on the Memory Tree on the lawn of South Shore Community Center, as well as a star placed on the tree in the lobby with the name(s) of loved one(s). As contributions were received, bulbs were illuminated throughout the season, and the names of the donors and those remembered have been published in the Cohasset Mariner. The tax-deductible contributions helped continue quality programs South Shore Community Center.

Participation options were:

Individual

Forget-me-not white lights for a gift of $1;

Angel

Individuals, businesses, or professionals giving $15 or more, Forget-me-not white lights;

Archangel

Individuals, businesses, or professionals giving $50 or more. Forget-me-not white lights.

Generosity will be acknowledged with lights on The Memory Tree, and on the scroll published Weekly.

Make checks payable to South Shore Community Center, 110 Box 631. 3 North Main Street, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Blood donors, supporters thanked

Next blood drive is Jan. 16

The Red Cross wishes to thank all those involved in the Cohasset Community Blood Drive held on Sept. 19 for making it a success. Congratulations and thanks to the 131 individuals who "gave the gift of life": Bill Adams, Marlena Alex, David Alexander, Gary Anderson, Bob Anton, Kristen Astley, Marion and Tom Atkinson, Dick Avery, Clyde Baker, Mark Baker, Gwen Baldry, Bryan Baldwin, Gloria Bamford, Paul Barry, Bob Beggan, William Bell, David Bigley, Rene Bouchard (Pembroke), Katie Brennock, Barbara and Charlie Buckley, Johanne Camire (Pembroke), Melissa Clark, Mike Coyne, Kathy Crosby, Kevin Crough, Laurie Cummings, Joe Curley, Bob Dennis, Mary Donovan, Joyce Dulong (Norwell), Rob Durant, Susan Durant, Nino D'urso, Gerry Earle, Sister Norma Ethier, Sheila Evans, Elaine Fahey, Bernadette Faulkner, John Ferrie (Scituate), Meg Fitzpatrick, Maureen Flaherty, John Flanagan, Mrs. Bobbi Fowle, Jason Frady, Gerald Freedman (Hull), Bill Fusco, Steve Gammon, Steve Gaumer, Galt Grant, Norma Grassey, Robert Gregory (Kingston), Jean Hejja, Linda Henry, Nancy Herlin, Peter Hubbell (Marshfield), Brenda Hunt, Cynthia Hurley, Edward Karcher, Dorothy Kelso (Duxbury), William and Debbie Ketchum, Rick and Karen Kirkendall, Janet Konkle, Krista Kuhn, David Kusek, Joseph Lavigne, Trish Leahy, John Lehner, John Lengyel, Kevin Lessard, Michael Libby and Joseph Litchfield.

Also, Janet Mahoney, Carmella Martel, Pat Martin, Laurel Martinez, Susan Mavilia, Larry and Ann Mitchell, Aimee Mitchell (came down from Boston), Tish Morse, Julie Motley, Craig Muir, Charles Mundhenk, Wis Murray, Stephanie Noble, Taffy Nothnagle, Jerome O'Callaghan, Rich Ofsthun, Robert and Isabel Olsen, Kathy O'Neil, Jerry O'Sullivan, Mary Parker, Steve Parnell, Chuck Peterson, Karen Quigley, Rebecca Quigley (Kingston), Jackie Ralston, Jack Reynolds, Candice Reynolds (Quincy), Rev. Gary Ritts, Jeff Rogers, Gina Rosano, Jamie Ross, Lisa Sanborn (Marshfield), Carol Sandblom, Elizabeth Sandblom, Charles Santoro, Helene Sceery, Mike Sceery, Richard and Susan Schmidt, Robert Schwandt, John Seavey, Matthew Sheehan (Kingston), Diane Shipp, Rich Silvia, Anne Spang, Gail Stevens, Andrew Stoessel, Mark St. Onge, Carol St. Pierre, William Sullivan, Jim Theriault, Dr. Sandra Thomas, Helene Thornton, Judy Volungis, James Waples, Susan Watrous, Alix White, Kitty Whitley, Jack Worley and Doug Yeager.

Al was a tireless worker for this cause for more than 50 years, serving many years as chairman.

In addition to all those heroes listed above, there were many others generous with their time who organized the event, called or organized prospective donors to schedule appointments and many people who worked the day of the Blood Drive to help with registration, the canteen and as donor escorts. These included: Nancy Anderson, Julia Carlton, Corinne Cahill, Mary Edmonds, Merle Graham, Mary Hartwell, Dienna Lehner, Lynn Layman, Shirley Marten, Mary McCarthy, Molly McGowan, Bruce McMeekin, Elizabeth O'Connell, Ann O'Connor, Barbara Power, Ginny Riley, Donna Saylor, Joan Stockman, Karen Sullivan, Sandy Therieault, Joan Trask, Grace Tuckerman and Bob Winsor.

In addition to the above donors, the Red Cross and the Cohasset community would also like to recognize the many others who offered to donate that day but were unable to because of health reasons or because of the very large turnout in response to the Sept. 11 tragedies.

Everyone associated with the Cohasset Community Blood Drive is saddened by the recent death of Al Odermatt, who died unexpectedly on Dec. 29. Al was a tireless worker for this cause for more than 50 years, serving many years as chairman. He was recognized by the Red Cross at the September Blood Drive for his long dedication to this worthwhile effort.

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Jan. 16. The Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main St. and Summer St. from 1:30-7:30 p.m. As in the past, baby-sitting will be provided from 3-5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

Please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. The Red Cross welcomes any new individuals who are able to donate blood, any organizations which would like to work with the Cohasset Community Blood Drive to organize their own donors for each blood drive and, of course, volunteers to help on or before the day of each blood drive. Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 1-800-448-3543.

HEALTH NOTES

Little Harbor water quality results are in

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Before Christmas, we talked about the Little Harbor irregulars and their work of taking water quality samples in Little Harbor. The water samples have been analyzed and this week, we'll discuss the results. Not all of the analysis of the data has been accomplished, but the initial results provide us with an indication of the present condition of Little Harbor.

The data shows generally increased bacteria counts during rain events in Little Harbor.

In all, the volunteers took ten water samples at five different dates. By comparison, in 1999, Camp Dresser & McKee (CDM) took 14 samples on one date, and developed its conclusions of wet-weather conditions in Little Harbor on those samples.

The sampling instructions required the volunteers to take samples between four and seven hours after the beginning of a rain event in which a half-inch or more of rain fell. The volunteers were also instructed not to take samples if the water temperature was below 40 degrees Fahrenheit, the lower limit for viability of most bacteria in water.

The water was sampled for fecal coliform, and the reporting unit was colonies per hundred milliliters of water. Results for all samples were between 1040 colonies and less than 5 colonies for the samples taken. The average of all samples taken was 276 colonies. The standard for shellfish harvesting is 14 colonies and for safe swimming is 200. Most of the data was taken on Dec.15 when the water temperature was about 44 degrees. Earlier data, when the temperatures were in the range of 50 to 60 results were somewhat higher than those taken at the lower temperature.

Data taken on Nov. 20 and Dec. 1 were below eight colonies, but there was essentially no rainfall on those days. The data taken was consistent with the latest data taken by the Department of Marine Fisheries in 1996, and by CDM and shows generally increased bacteria counts during rain events in Little Harbor. We have yet to assess the effect of tidal flushing on the data, as well as the effect of temperature. As we work with the data, more information will become available and will be reported.

Conclusions from the data are about what all of those taking samples in Little Harbor have been saying. Little Harbor is not that bad, but it's not really good either. If people living on this estuary want to do something about the cleanliness of the water, it can be done.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

New Year's crystal ball

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The more things change the more they remain the same, as we shall learn in 2002.

JANUARY — Osama bin Laden is captured by gendarmes while plotting to bomb the Greenbush line in a small bistro on the Left Bank in Paris. French refuse to extradite him to the United States until they are assured he won't face the death penalty. President George (43) Bush rules that France is protecting terrorists, sends in Marines.

FEBRUARY — Rebels at the State House rise up and deny Speaker Tom Finneran a new $500,000 carpet for his office at the Capital. "I guess we showed him," crow the dissenters as they prepare to pass a measure appropriating $1 million for a new carpet and pine paneling for the Speaker's new suite of offices at the State House.

MARCH — Fleet Bank announces that its coming merger with Time-Warner, United Airlines, Disneyland and the Republic of Papua New Guinea will result in only 27,000 layoffs below the management level. Critics hail move as a spectacular advance for the New England economy.

APRIL — Red Sox open season under new ownership at Fenway Park. Players return to dressing room to find they are being charged 25 cents for towel rental. "After spending $700 million to buy the club and $100 million in salaries, we have to economize on some of the amenities," says new owner John Henry. Nomar, Pedro and Manny contact the Yankees.

MAY — Democrats, led by James Carville, still digging into President George (43) Bush's past, discover that he once dipped a girl's pigtails into an inkwell in a Midland, Texas, middle school. "She definitely has an harassment suit," says Paula Jones, her adviser. House Democrats question independent counsel Ken Starr about impeachment statute.

JUNE — Former President Bill Clinton endorses Janet Reno in her campaign for governor of Florida. "First, let me make on thing perfectly clear," says Bill, anticipating the first question from Bill Reilly of the Fox News Channel "I did not have sex with that woman."

JULY — New Massport ruling directs that all airline passengers fly out of Logan International Airport in the nude after a miniaturized nuclear device is found in the navel of an Egyptian belly dancer. Attorney General John Ashford says it's okay with him as long as men and women fly in separate planes with the shades drawn.

AUGUST — Rare harbor gulls are discovered nesting within 300 yards of the Greenbush line right of way in Cohasset. Hingham selectmen file for temporary injunction to halt work on the Old Colony tracks to Scituate. "It looks like this calls for a complete new environmental impact statement," observes Sen. Bob Hedlund.

SEPTEMBER — Acting Governor Jane Swift wins Republican nomination to run for a full term. Jim Rappaport is nominated for lieutenant governor after 45 potential candidates (half the Republicans in the state) turn down the opportunity. "Jim who?" asks Jane, then she reconsiders, saying, "Maybe he'll baby-sit for the kids while I'm on the road."

OCTOBER — Patriots quarterback Tom Brady is injured in a game against the New York Jets. Backup quarterback Damon Huarte leads stunning comeback that lands him the starting job. "There's no quarterback controversy," says Drew Bledsoe, now the third string signal-caller, as he cashes his $20 million paycheck. "Right," says Tom Brady, as he banks the first installment of his renegotiated $10 million contract.

NOVEMBER — Cost overruns of the Big Dig rise by another $1 billion. Tolls of the Mass Turnpike are raised to cover the deficit. It now costs Howie Carr $50 to commute from Wellesley to his job in downtown Boston. A farmer in western Massachusetts must pay $25 to move his John Deere tractor from Springfield to his farm.

DECEMBER — Year-long bid by the Knights of Columbus to erect a Christmas crèche on the Lexington Town Green is turned down by the courts. Thus the crèche joins the Easter bunny, the Thanksgiving turkey and Santa's reindeer as symbols of the majority religion that must not be used lest they offend the captive minority

A very Happy New Year for Harbor Express ferry service

By Martha A. R. Bewick
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

Last Friday evening, we made the trip from Hingham to Quincy in seven minutes. Every green light was with us, for a change. We were heading for the last ferry ride of Harbor Express, a round trip from Quincy to Logan, Boston and back. I thought I would trade in some unused tickets for a farewell beer or two, and wave a mournful goodbye to a wonderful ferry service.

Instead of gloom, when we arrived, there was celebration aboard "Flying Cloud". A decorated Christmas wreath twinkled over the coffee bar, Hingham friends greeted us, who were also aboard for the "last ride," and crew and their friends gathered aboard. There had been a last minute reprieve, and Harbor Express would continue for six months. Maybe more. It was a memorable South Shore moment!

Bit by bit, we learned the news. Thanks to negotiations between representatives of General Dynamics, Lee Bishop in particular, who runs American Overseas Marine, Senator Robert Hedlund, Governor Swift's staff, and Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, an agreement had been shaped whereby General Dynamics will continue service until June, and then the state take over the service.

The South Shore Chamber of Commerce had been in touch with Senator Kerry, who'd played a role. Braintree Representative Joseph Sullivan had helped, along with Representative Garrett Bradley, and Quincy's Mayor Sheets. Commuters had sent letters, including Hingham's Tom Maloney of Graham Gund Associates in Cambridge, who takes Harbor Express to Long Wharf, and walks to Kendall Square.

We had called Mike McGurl of Scituate, and Bill Walker of Norwell, the Harbor Express developers and managers, to find out how we could help. As AfTA (Advocates for Transportation Alternatives), we had sent letters to General Dynamics urging continuation of the excellent service while a buyout was structured, and financing sought. Everyone had offered help and had rallied to save one of the South Shore's major assets.

This crisis highlights the great results that can occur when the community works together in the public interest. Who stands to gain? Each one of us who finds the ferry the best, and fastest way to get to and from Logan airport, including pilots, flight attendants, and those who use Logan for weekly commutes across the country; all of our visitors, family and friends. Those of us who travel to Boston to shop, to work, for lunch, for festivals or summer fun. Those who are discouraged from parking in the Hingham Shipyard because there's no room. Those of us who greet our guests from Boston at the South Shore's gateway, the ferry dock in Boston or Quincy or Hingham. The public agencies who must find good alternate ways to encourage auto drivers to take transit, under legal mandates.

Ferries are the most attractive transit options offered in the Boston region, but lose passengers when they must compete with highly subsidized public transit — buses, commuter rail, and heavy rail.

Hingham's ferry traffic built slowly from its beginnings in 1975 until it became part of the state transit network, thanks to early bond fund support by Sen. Allan MacKinnon of Weymouth. With an increase in frequency, and the advent of 25-minute trip times as well, the Hingham ferry is limited in its capacity only by parking shortages. Quincy's Harbor Express is limited by its need for additional vessels. With these, Hull commuters could get to Boston directly, and commuters from Quincy could reach Boston more quickly from Quincy as well.

This crisis highlights the great results that can occur when the community works together in the public interest.

The Harbor Express crisis points out the need and the opportunity for the Commonwealth to take a serious look at the transit capacity provided by the waterways of Boston Harbor and Massachusetts Bay, and to make ferries and the navigational channels and rights of way equal partners in the overall transportation picture. We have a natural protected right of way which has proved itself for almost 400 years. The cooperation which has taken place over the last few days could make even more of a difference if the entire ferry scene in Boston Harbor were revisited by these same elected and appointed officials with an eye to the future.

Since September 11, New York City has rediscovered the urgency of using the waterways. On that terrible day private ferry traffic increased from 30,000 to 200,000, when vessels were used for evacuation, transport of injured and movement of supplies. Since then the increase has stabilized at 60,000 while trans-Hudson subway connections are rebuilt. The experience in New York demonstrates that ferries are critically important transportation links. New York developers now acknowledge that there had been little planning for the use of the waterways in a way that integrates with existing and proposed major landside developments. This is now the focus of new scrutiny there, as it could be here.

As Arthur Imperatore Jr., President of NY Waterway, said recently, "When the history of New York City is written 25 to 30 years from now, I think people will look back on the ferry industry as one of the major factors in the development of the 21st Century city. The river is changing from being a barrier into both a highway and a commons around which whole new communities are being developed." (New York Times 12/19/01) Here in Boston, our Harbor is our commons as well. It's time that we really understood how it can be used to better serve our transit and access needs. Meanwhile, we celebrate those who began, sustained, and have supported Harbor Express. Thanks! And Happy New Year!

Greenbush price tag

under Hingham Square, Mulhern said.

"All the major design elements are in there," he said.

Mulhern, who will essentially turn the proposal into a contract document including final terms and conditions before awarding it to Cashman/Beatty – a process expected to take a couple of months — said surveying is underway and he expects ground to be broken in the spring of 2003, with service up and running the fall of 2005.

"We're very pleased the project, which has been 16 years in the making, is within the range of engineering estimates, especially in light of the fact of late there has been a public debate on the project budget," he said.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, a Greenbush opponent, said even if the project comes in within the $434 million, it's too expensive.

"It will cost $350,000 per car off the road," he said referring to estimates the train will take 1,300 cars off the road. "The cost outweighs the benefits."

While Bradley stressed he hasn't given up the fight, he concedes the news is not good for project opponents.

"Clearly this is another step that brings Greenbush closer to reality," he said.

AfTA (Advocates for Transportation Alternatives), an anti-Greenbush group led by John Bewick, a former state Secretary of Environmental Affairs, is not surprised by the impending contract award.

AfTA filed an injunction Friday in Plymouth Superior Court as part of its ongoing lawsuit alleging the MBTA violated the MEPA (Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act) process. MEPA is the state equivalent of the Environmental Protection Agency and requires major projects to meet certain environmental standards including a balanced look at alternatives. AfTA charges the MBTA studies on Greenbush were designed to confirm a predetermined outcome with the benefits and costs of the train deeply distorted.

"We'll be in court trying to block this from going forward," Bewick said. Currently, AfTA has three Greenbush-related lawsuits on the books. The one, which AfTA feels may hold the most clout, concerns land-transfer issues. State law requires a vote of the legislature before land can be transferred from conservation to another use. AfTA contends the T cannot "take" the right-of-way in Cohasset, which owns the abandoned rail bed that has been used for passive recreation, without legislative approval. Cohasset agreed to a friendly land-taking in exchange for $1.5 million as part of the town's mitigation agreement.

Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan said there is no turning back.

"We've had just about every legal monkey wrench thrown at us...and I think we'll be able to overcome this," he said. "There's just too much public value to the project to let one group stand in the way."

Rep. Sullivan, the transportation committee chairman, says restoration of the train is good news for the South Shore. He expects the line to exceed ridership expectations as is the case with Middleboro and Plymouth, which are Greenbush's two sister lines as part of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project. Greenbush will use all double-decker trains, he said.

"In terms of economic development and a stimulus package – we need to build Greenbush more than ever," Sullivan said. He added the committee on transportation will monitor the project closely.

Mulhern said a further downturn in the economy will not affect the project.

"It's a fully funded project," he said. "It's in our capital program."

Mulhern said there were four bids on the project and the Cashman/Beatty bid was the highest ranked on its technical proposal and the lowest price. The joint venture includes ten subcontractors. Design/engineers for the project is STV, Inc. and the environmental subcontractor is Rizzo Associates, he said.

Greenbush is a design-build project meaning, unless a key assumption changes, the contractor assumes the risk of potential cost overruns. But Rep. Bradley of Hingham disputes that and believes the project will cost more.

"With design-build the permitting process is streamlined and more things are taken care of on the fly and that naturally leads to more change orders," he said.

Sec. Sullivan said Balfour Beatty, which has encountered problems on other jobs, will be carefully scrutinized before the contract is awarded.

The 17-mile Greenbush line, which will start in Braintree, will run through Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate. Weymouth, Hingham and Cohasset have all signed mitigation agreements with the MBTA. Scituate is still negotiating with the MBTA over location of the proposed layover station.

Lady Skippers get to .500 with pair of wins

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With two decisive wins over vacation, the Cohasset girls basketball team proved that the varsity level is exactly where it should be.

"We feel like we are where we belong," asserted third year coach Ellen Carr. "The kids played well, and it will give them some confidence."

Last Friday in Avon, the Lady Skippers dismantled a rebuilding Lady Panthers squad with ease, 67-26.

Juniors Lindsay Grossman and Maura O'Brien were top performers for the team, throwing in 16 points apiece. Grossman ran the point very well, picking apart the Panther defense in a halfcourt set offense, while O'Brien utilized her height and leaping ability to dominate the boards.

Cohasset jumped out early, and used their big lead to get the entire squad as much playing time as possible. Sometimes shifting in rotations of five players, third year coach Ellen Carr was pleased at the way everyone performed, even those unaccustomed to playing at the varsity level.

"There is not a lot to say about a game like that, except that we had fun," noted the coach.

Another advantage of the easy game was it gave junior guards Heather Peraino and LaRaine Langford, who had missed the first four games with injuries, a chance to work themselves back into the lineup.

Neither of them seemed to have lost so much as a step, as Peraino tallied 11 points, and Langford got right back into her duties of leading the team in steals.

With sophomore Jen Buckley playing as another athletic backcourter, the Lady Skippers now have their full pressing unit, and plan to use it to its fullest potential.

"We feel like we are where we belong. The kids played well, and it will give them some confidence."
Cohasset girls basketball coach Ellen Carr

"LaRaine and Heather are tremendous assets to the team," lauded Carr. "It is great to have four guards."

The night after the Avon win, the Lady Skippers came right back, defeating their talented local rival Scituate, 57-45.

O'Brien again led the offensive charge, throwing down a game-high 22 points, including 8-for-11 from the free throw line.

"Maura had a great game," complimented Grossman, who had 16 points herself in the win. "It motivated the whole team."

O'Brien again won the battle of the boards, with eight of her points coming on putbacks.

Peraino came away with eight points, as did sophomore center Danielle Pinkus, who is fast becoming a fearsome low post threat with moves involving either hand.

For the second straight night, Cohasset simply dominated the opening minutes. After Pinkus won the tip that led to a quick layup, Carr let her full-court press loose.

Strong showing from Littauer highlights tough Marshfield tourney showing

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The learning process continues this weekend for the young and inexperienced Cohasset High wrestling team.

After a disappointing showing last weekend in the long-running Marshfield Tournament, the Skippers will compete at the Whitman-Hanson Tournament Saturday. A total of 10 teams will be competing at Whitman.

Last weekend, Cohasset finished 15th out of 22 teams in the tournament the Skippers had won back in 1999.

This time around, Cohasset was one of four Div. 3 schools competing in the 22 team field, which was loaded with Div. 1 schools, one of these being Bridgewater-Raynham High, winner of the tourney.

The best showing for Cohasset last Friday night was turned in by freshman Jonathan Littauer, who finished third at 103 pounds. He lost to the number one seed from Rockland in the semifinals, but managed to grab third place in the consolation round.

The Skippers also took two eighth place finishes with Terry Baroudi, a junior wrestling at 135 pounds and senior John Hussey competing at 215 pounds.

Baroudi was a tough luck loser twice in the tourney. After winning his opener in lopsided fashion on Thursday, the junior fell in overtime, 9-7, in his second bout. He won his first match on Friday by pin to pit himself against Plymouth South's Billy Pearson, a Div. 1 standout. After getting down quickly, 5-0, on a couple of first period takedowns, Baroudi battled back to get within two points at 7-5 in the final period. He then completed a dramatic takedown inside the final 20 seconds of the match to pull even at 7-all. Literally in the final seconds, however, Pearson flipped Baroudi off his feet to score two points for the win.

"We're a young and inexperienced team," said Cohasset coach

Cohasset's Greg O'Connell (#8) tries to untangle from Rockland player in recent action. The Cohasset High hockey team improved to 4-0 with win a 8-2 over Holbrook-Avon in their final game of 2001. Swim team holding its own

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Frustration is hard to avoid when a collection of winter swimmers walk into Duxbury's Percy Walker Pool only to find a year round-trained army of 45 male swimmers, already in formation, an hour before the meet starts.

But such is the story for the Scituate-Cohasset swim team, the only team in the Patriot League that is not comprised primarily, if not completely, of "U.S. Swimmers." In fact, not one of the Sci-Coh athletes swim year round.

This gets one wondering...how have the Skipper/Sailors won two of their first three meets?

"I have been so impressed with what the team has accomplished this year," effused second year coach Jamie Kearney, a Scituate native. "Our team is just a group of kids that works for everything it gets."

Sci-Coh definitely worked hard to beat out the Sachems of Middleboro last Wednesday, a team that only has four-season-swimmers. Nevertheless, the Sailor/Skips beat out their hosts, 91-75.

The oddest thing about the meet was that the winter swimmers only won two out of the 12 events. Junior Becky Keys of Scituate took the 500-yard freestyle, and junior captain Bryan Bilton of Cohasset won the 100 yard backstroke.

Other than that, this meet was clearly won by Cohasset and Scituate taking virtually every second, third, and fourth place possible. The scoring set-up is six points for first place, four for second, three for third, two for fourth, and one for fifth.

"True, our team is not going to Cohasset boys holiday hoop tourney a repeat of last year

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

For the second year in a row, rival towns Cohasset and Scituate delighted the local fans by going head-to-head in the finals of the Annual Cohasset Holiday Classic.

And for the second year in a row, Scituate was crowned champion of the four-team tourney, taking the championship game, 70-56.

The teams stayed relatively close in the opening minutes, with Scituate mounting small leads, and Cohasset making quick runs to even it out. When Scituate went up 27-19, though, the points began to come in buckets for the Sailors, as they went on a 15-1 run to push their advantage to 42-20.

Senior captain Mike Barry, who was named Scituate's tourney All-star for his efforts, sank two consecutive threes to cap the run. He ended the game with 12 points, and five boards.

The teams went into the break with Scituate out front 48-26, a lead

Gymnasts hold on

Cohasset-Norwell squad nearly shocked by Notre Dame

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

In days past, the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics meet against Notre Dame Academy was really nothing more than a feel-good competition against an overmatched Cougars team. Those days look to be long gone as the Cougars sporting a very healthy 3-0 record, threw everything they had at C-N in an inspiring 128 – 125.15 loss at the Head Over Heels gymnastics school in Norwell.

C-N was pushed hard enough that it was forced to break its' six-year-old school record of 127.15 to clinch the win. The Cougars did the same, bettering the 123.6 school record they set last winter against Nauset.

On the balance beam, Kristin Sheerin, Norwell freshman Jen Guiney, Meredith Bixby, Nancy Durkin, and Norwell's Samantha Rosen and Amy Maree combined to break the school event record.

Sheerin, who is aiming for the national meet this season, had her best first-meet performance ever by capturing the all-around with a score of 35.3. Last year, C-N's co-captain opened with a score in the 33s.

"It was a very good start for me," said Sheerin.

First-year Notre Dame coach Julie Brush got a huge performance from Abington sophomore Nicolette Hylan. Hylan had her highest score of the season in the all-around with a 32.65 to finish second to Sheerin. She also was runner-up to Sheerin on the bars and beam.

Brush, who has a young team with just one senior, captain Meghan Shea of Kingston, expected her team to give C-N a tough meet. She wasn't as confident, though, about having a 4-0 record by meet's end.

"Just looking from previous meets, I thought they'd probably beat us," said Brush, "but I knew it was going to be a close meet."

With Sheerin looking to be close to top form, the Cougars didn't have any individual winners. The team's strength, though, is consistency and it rang true as Pembroke freshman Kristin Cina was third on both the vault and floor, and sophomore Rachel Galanek of Plymouth tied for third on floor and was fourth in the all-around.

Bixby was her usual solid self with a pair of second-place finishes on the vault and bars, as well as third in the all-around. Guiney tied for third with Galanek on the floor.

Despite the loss, Brush was very pleased with the Cougars' performance as they pushed C-N harder than they have in years. 5-7 last year, the ND squad is looking to vastly improve on its record.

"We broke the school record but there are still lots of places where we can improve," Brush said. "I get the impression the freshmen coming in have contributed more than in the past. This is a good, hard-working team.

"We don't do any really big moves but we are consistent. We had a couple of falls on the beam and we need work there, but we're solid on the vault and floor."

C-N will be looking to improve to 2-0 on Jan. 8 when it hosts Hanover (7:30 p.m. start) at the South Shore Community Center in Cohasset. Spectators will also get a chance to see the local up-and-coming middle school gymnasts compete, though they won't figure into the team scoring. Notre Dame gets back into the swing of things on Jan. 8 at Head Over Heels with a tri-meet against Hingham and Case.

big enough that any on-looker could consider the game a done deal. However, the loyal Skipper and Sailor fans remained on hand for a very lively and entertaining second half.

Scituate pulled away in the first few minutes after the break, opening up a 68-37 cushion with 7:14 to go. As is the practice during lopsided games like this, both coaches began to pull their starters, opting to utilize their full bench.

And for the final seven plus minutes, the Skipper reserves truly dominated their Sailor counterparts. Never has this reporter seen a team go that long without a field goal, but Scituate was held to a pair of free throws the rest of the way.

Cohasset scored 17 unanswered points before Jeff Ciulla answered with two foul shots with 35 seconds remaining.

Sophomore Tommy Cuddihy led the Sailors with 16 points, seven rebounds and three steals. With 24 points in Scituate's first round game against Wayland, Cuddihy was named the tournament MVP.

Cohasset sophomore Chris Bilodeau, playing his first games back after suffering a broken pinky during football season, led Cohasset in scoring with 13 points in the final, also collecting four steals.

Senior Matt Bilodeau provided very steady leadership at the point, and was named Cohasset's Tournament All-Star for his solid two-day performance.

Last year's tournament MVP, senior center Jessie McKinnell of Scituate, was held to nine points, although he did snatch up 11 rebounds and block five shots.

In the first round, Cohasset played Avon in what everyone considered to be the game of the Tournament: a double overtime decision going the host Skippers' way, 87-84.

The visiting Panthers appeared well on their way toward embarrass their hosts, jumping out to a 22-8 lead before the Skippers clawed back to an eight point deficit by halftime.

The shocking start was very reminiscent of last year's opening round, when Avon opened up a 15-3 over Scituate before losing 80-72.

In this year's contest, Avon led the entire way until the Skippers shot their way back into it, gaining a 58-56 advantage with five minutes left.

The two teams traded baskets the rest of the way, with regulation time expiring and the score knotted at 67.

Senior Pete Maitland scored five straight points to open the extra frame, as he finished the game with 14 points and four steals.

With Cohasset ahead 76-73 with one second remaining, and fans from both sides reaching for their winter coats, Avon senior Jim Saia swished a turnaround three pointer to tie it.

Saia recorded 34 points in this game, including five threes, and was named Avon's All-Star.

The Bilodeau brothers then combined for all 11 of the Skippers final points, shooting 5-of-5 from the floor. The final decision maker was Chris' trey from the corner that sealed it with 1.3 seconds left.

Matt Bilodeau was Cohasset's top point producer in this one, collecting 23 points, 10 rebounds (not bad for a 5-foot-8 point guard) and three steals. Chris finished with 14 points, all coming after halftime.

Sophomore center Sean Connolley provided a very steady paint presence, tallying 18 points on 8-of-11 shooting from the floor, along with nine boards.

Scituate did not have as tough a time on Friday, defeating the Wayland Warriors 71-55.

The Sailors went into halftime up by three, and pushed the lead up to six with eight minutes left. Barry (18 points for the day) knocked down eight straight for the Sailors, to give his team a 49-35 buffer.

McKinnell, playing his first game back since he dislocated his elbow just 11 days earlier, tallied 14 points to go with 11 boards and six blocks.

Torin Sweeney. "We were going up against some very big schools in that tourney."

The coach added: "My other kids wrestled well. We have some talent on the team and it's just a case of the kids pulling it together. The tournaments help and this next one should prove very helpful for the kids."

Bridgewater-Raynham finished with 227 points to outdistance runner-up Plymouth South by 50 points.

B-R got wins from Ryan Gracia (112), Rob LeRoux (135), Mike Zella (160), John Freyermuth (215) and Lee Beane (heavyweight).

LeRoux and Beane were named Outstanding Wrestlers.

inbound the ball on three consecutivepossessions, as the aforementioned quick line-up forced turnover after turnover.

Scituate did manage to claw back into it, finding themselves down by only six with 1:30 showing on the clock. But Cohasset hit their free throws down the stretch, ending the threat.

Cohasset will re-renter South Shore League play this week with a bit of momentum, something that has been missing the last few years. Perhaps it can even carry them as far as the playoffs.

"I would really like to see that happen," said Carr. "There are some great opportunities down the line if we can keep this up."

send anyone to nationals," admitted Kearney, "but seconds, thirds and fourth places keep the points coming in our direction.

"It's hard not to get intimidated by these teams with 30 or 40 boys on them. But the kids just swim their races and try not to get bogged down with that stuff."

Despite good team depth, Duxbury's powerful squad proved too much for the then undefeated SciCohs, losing to the Dragons 95.5-75.5.

Duxbury coach Jay Kraft, who also happens to be the US Swim coach, enjoys having his team look and act very professional and intimidating before a meet. And they could back it up with their swimming, since they took first place in every event of the day.

Coming on the heels of a loss to Nauset, Duxbury had its collective game face on for this match, invoking all of its pre-meet intimidation rituals. This included hissing "Scituasset", and jumping into the pool in unison and splashing around.

Although the SciCohs choose to refrain from such activities, their performance early in the season has been truly remarkable considering who they are and, more to the point, who their opponents are.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse registration set for Jan. 5

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will hold its sign-up for the spring season on Saturday, Jan. 5 from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School. For the first time, the program will be registering girls to play in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Girls League, as well as its traditional boys teams.

This will be the only day to register for the program. Spaces are limited at all age levels; while Cohasset Youth Lacrosse endeavors to accept everyone who files their paperwork on registration day, the program has had to turn children away at some age levels in each of the last three seasons.

Registrations will be taken in the 14 & Under (7th and 8th graders) and 12 & Under age groups for both boys and girls. At the 10 & Under level, boys and girls can sign up, but the competition will be in men's lacrosse (full pads and contact) rather than in the women's game.

The youth lacrosse program is dedicated to introducing children to the sport. All players receive roughly equal playing time regardless of ability. Cohasset participates in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program, which does not keep standings or have playoffs. Every team makes several road trips per year, which be as close as games in Scituate or as far away as Martha's Vineyard.

In addition, there will be season-ending jamborees for both the boys and girls.

The youth program is expecting to field seven teams this spring, depending on demand and available coaching. In spite of the creation of the girls program and the addition of a second 10-& Under team, roster spots at all levels will be limited and it is possible that some youngsters will be turned away.

Parents should expect Jan. 5 to be the only opportunity to sign up. Those who can not attend that day should contact Chuck Jaffe, coordinator of youth lacrosse, in sufficient time to have registration materials completed prior to Jan. 5.

The registration fee is $110 for one child, $200 for two; the fee covers a uniform and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes mandatory insurance coverage and a subscription to a magazine especially designed for kids. Late registrations, if roster spots are available, are $165.

The program is limited to Cohasset residents. At the 14 & Under level, players can sign up for the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program regardless of whether they are active on Cohasset's Middle School teams, or if they play on the team of a private school.

In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. The spring practice schedule has not yet been set. The teams will begin practicing in early March — and indoor practice time has been scheduled — and start playing games in April. The season concludes with the MBYLL Jamboree, in mid-June.

In addition to players, the program is looking for additional coaches at all levels.

Lacrosse is a contact sport; at all levels for boys, practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all boys must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces. Hockey helmets are not allowed, although hockey arm and shoulder pads are (hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick).

The girls game has less contact, but practices will be every bit as physical and demanding as for the boys. All girls must be equipped with sticks, mouthpieces and approved goggles.

There will be more information on the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program available at the Jan. 6 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session — or if you are interested in volunteering to coach — contact Jaffe at 781-383-9858.

Mary Chittim

Mary (Chase) Chittim died Dec. 23, 2001 at the Orchard View Manor nursing home in Barrington, R.I. after a brief illness at the age of 84.

Born in Concord, Mass., she was a graduate of Fitchburg State Teachers College and in her early years taught in New Canaan, Conn. She later went to the Boston area elementary schools.

A resident of Barrington, R.I. the last five years, living with her son Mark Chittim, she was also a resident of Cohasset, for more than 30 years.

She was an active volunteer for more than 20 years at the Cohasset Consignment Shop.

The wife of the late David Chittim, she leaves three sons, David B. of Pittsburgh, Pa., Kevin G. of Hopkington, N.H., Mark H. of Barrington, Fla.; and one daughter, Ann K Chittim of Brookline; a brother, John K Chittim of Morgantown, W. Va.; seven great-grandchildren and one great-grandson.

A funeral mass was celebrated in St. Anthony Church in Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery in Cohasset.

Arrangements were handled by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset.

Donations in her memory may be sent to the American Cancer Society at 110 Chestnut St in Brockton, Mass., 02301.

WORSHIP NOTES

Abbey series

The Benedictine monks in Hingham announce the third speaker in the Glastonbury Abbey series, "Listening to Other Voices: Spirituality in Everyday Life." Charles I. Clough, Jr., chairman and CEO of Clough Capital Partners, L.R., a Boston-based investment firm and chairman of the board of trustees of Boston College will speak on "Spirituality and the Workplace: A Deacon on Wall Street." The talk is scheduled for Thursday, Jan. 17 at 7:15 p.m. at the abbey Conference Center.

The program is free of charge and donations are welcome. Please call for reservations at 781-749-2155.

First Friday Mass

First Friday Mass will be celebrated on Friday, Jan. 4 at 5 p.m. at St. Anthony Church. Eucharistic adoration will follow from 6 to 10 p.m.

While all are welcome to visit the church for quiet prayer during this exposition of the Blessed Sacrament, it is important that at least two people be present at all times. If you can commit to one hour during the evening, call Nancy Roach at the parish office at 383-0219, to sign up.

The Wednesday night holy hours that have been led by the Rev. Peter Shakalis for the past six years have been discontinued. Father Shakalis, the retired pastor of St. Casmir Church in Brockton, has decided to cut back on his work schedule. He has assisted not only Father Mulvehill at St. Anthony Parish, but also numerous other pastors on the South Shore. Parishioners who wish to send Father Shakalis a note of thanks for all his work here may contact the parish office for his address.

Hingham's Isaac Sprague is in the spotlight

Large exhibition of his works in Wellesley

By Lesley Mahoney
LMAHONEY@CNC.COM

Although he initially followed his father's advice to pursue a practical career, Isaac Sprague — a Hingham native — ultimately turned his full attention to his interests in drawing and painting.

Sprague's career change was undoubtedly welcomed by the many who enjoyed his work, mostly known as his depictions of flora and fauna. It also made possible the full exhibition that will be at the Wellesley Historical Society through May — "Isaac Sprague: Naturalist & Delineator."

Photograph of Isaac Sprague

The exhibition provides a comprehensive look at Sprague's work, from his birds and botanicals to his lesser-known depictions of New Hampshire's White Mountains.

A Hingham native, Sprague (1811-1895) settled in Cambridge for quite some time. It was not until 1865 that he moved to Wellesley, where he lived for the remainder of his life. The move to a small farm on Linden Street was actually spawned by the ill health of his second wife, Sarah; at the time, west of Boston was considered healthier than the city.

Sprague's wife died five years later (his first wife died only five years after they were married), and he continued his drawing and painting into his late '70s.

Although Sprague tried the "practical" route by apprenticing his uncle, a carriage painter, at age 14, by age 28, he turned completely to art. Previously, he had pursued his passion on the side by studying the birds of Nuttall's "Ornithology" and observing and painting them during walks through the South Shore towns of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Scituate.

Hence, an artist was born, self-taught at that. But the title was not one Sprague would accept, preferring to refer to himself as a "naturalist and delineator."

Nevertheless, admirers of his work were quick to call him an artist.

It wasn't long before Sprague was noticed by John James Audubon, an American illustrator whose specialty was birds. He accompanied Audubon on a famous expedition out West, and made drawings and measurements for him.

The Wellesley exhibition includes a few of Audubon's pieces, which illustrate the contrast between the two artists' work.

While Audubon's work was very busy, Sprague "was more interested in the details, which made him so popular with ornithologists and botanists," said Laurel Nilsen, director of the Wellesley Historical Society.

Still, Audubon influenced Sprague to include more background into his work.

The exhibition's centerpiece is undoubtedly Sprague's "Golden Eagle," an oil on canvas that was an anonymous gift to the Historical Society.

Noting that eagles are rarely seen in the East, Nilsen said the model for this illustration was "almost certainly seen on his expedition with Audubon."

Unlike this oil, most of Sprague's work was in watercolor.

"Swamp Rose," rosa carolina, by Isaac Sprague

Another work that stands out is Sprague's "Blue Jay," a watercolor and gift of Sarah and Priscilla Sprague that actually features the Sprague family home in Hingham.

Beyond birds, Sprague made a name for himself illustrating flowers. His work in that genre includes the illustrations for Harvard Professor Asa Gray's 1856 "Manual of Botany," two Victorian parlor books, "Flowers of the Field and Forest" and "Beautiful Wild Flowers," and the illustrations for Harvard Professor George Lincoln Goodale's "Wild Flowers of North America."

The Wellesley Historical Society's exhibition features plates from these works. The plates and illustrations are part of the Historical Society's permanent collection.

In fact, with the exception of a few items on loan, most of the exhibition is comprised of the Historical Society's permanent collection.

"Isaac Sprague: Naturalist & Delineator" is on display at the Wellesley Historical Society, 229 Washington St., through May. Call 781-235-6690 for more information.

"Blue Jay," an Isaac Sprague watercolor, undated, was a gift of Misses Sarah and Priscilla Sprague, granddaughters of the artist.

"Pitcher Plant," sapracenia purpurea, by Isaac Sprague

Isaac Sprague's "Golden Eagle," an oil on canvas, was an anonymous gift to the Wellesley Historical Society.

"Wild Rose," c. 1880, an original Isaac Sprague watercolor, was a gift of Misses Sarah and Priscilla Sprague, granddaughters of the artist.

Movies I'd see again

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Top 10 films of 2001

By David Brudnoy
FILM CRITIC

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

If like me, you saw 300 movies a year, you wouldn't want to see many of them again. But if I had to watch 10 again, these are they; this is my approach, this year, to the 10 best list.

"A.I.," Steven Spielberg's homage of sorts to Stanley Kubrick, is a masterpiece much detested by most critics and ignored by most movie-goers. It is the tale of a very human-like android (the estimable Haley Joel Osment, supreme child actor), his doomed robot gigolo pal (Jude Law, sexy even as a machine) and a world in need of love and reordering of priorities.

"A Beautiful Mind" shows what Russell Crowe can do when not reduced to that toga twaddle that won him his undeserved Oscar last year. As the brilliant John Nash, who found one unique thing to make his life's work worthwhile but was bedeviled by paranoid schizophrenia, Crowe creates a nuanced character: charmer, lunatic, survivor. I did not know when I reviewed the film last week that Nash was also homosexual; the biography on which this movie is based is explicit about that. Once again, a major Hollywood release rewrites history and writes out the gays.

"Black Hawk Down" tells with precision and heart-pounding force of the horrific 1993 battle of Mogadishu, the last finale to Clinton's dumb Somalia adventure in "nation building." The battle was all day-all night and led to 19 Americans dead, many wounded, a thousand Somalis dead. The crawl at the end reminds us that we bugged out; what it omits is that this gave the world's bad guys the idea that Americans won't take the heat. Wonder what that led to.

"The Fellowship of the Ring" is right up there with "Harry Potter" as a fantasy film worthy of repeat viewing, a sure-fire gargantuan box office hit, one for mature children and grown-ups who don't quake at the prospect of letting their inner non-adult grab hold. Not "just" an adventure tale, it's an epic about the pre-modern world's virtues, nobility of spirit, fellowship of the worthy, truth, justice and, in a sense, the medieval Catholic and Nordic ways of life, although neither term is ever mentioned. Middle-earth could use more of this, and in 2002 and 2003 we'll get the continuing and concluding parts. Waiting will be agony.

"Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone," the year's biggest hit and the friendliest to wide-eyed children of all ages, is what had to come after J.K. Rowling's books turned a gazillion children on to reading, an awesome achievement. The child stars soar and the adults, notably Maggie Smith in full I-dare-you-to-cross-me mode, hold up their end of the bargain. Quidditch looks like even more fun than my fave, exciting hockey.

"In the Bedroom" reminds us of Sissy Spacek's acting skills — Tom Wilkinson's were never in doubt — in service to a tale of a senseless, heartbreaking murder of a good young man, of the Law's inability to bring about proper recompense, and of private action to do what the system cannot (or rather, given its inadequacies and stupidities, will not) do. Superb.

"L.I.E." gave the dependably excellent and often taken for granted Brian Cox the role of his life, as a pedophile with a huge redeeming part to his character, and introduced us to Paul Franklin Dano, a new kid actor, in a debut performance auguring a terrific career. Saddled by the moronic ratings board with the dreaded NC-17 curse of death, not because of violence, sex or language, but because its lead character is like that but not a monster, it was seen by few but is, for much of its length, amazing and distinctive. Most movies play it safe; this one dared.

The Coen brothers are an acquired taste though not all their movies rise to "Fargo" levels. Neither does "The Man Who Wasn't There," but this is slyly mood setting, and Billy Bob Thornton is on-point as a sad, soon to be desperate barber, uh huh. The film is graced by an A-list supporting cast, vibrant black and white photography and a perfectly laconic screenplay.

"Memento" backwards seen sense some makes. Understand can I than more lot a signify may it. Huh? Just trying to get into its spirit, about a mightily confused guy (Guy Pearce), a good cop-bad cop (Joe Pantoliano), a murder, maybe, or not, and fragile memory. Film fine a is this. Times three maybe or twice this see gotta you. Me to all it explain please out it figure you if.

David Lynch's "Mulholland Drive" isn't nearly as puzzling as "Memento" but it's a brain teaser featuring luscious babes, an irritating young director, a dwarf and enough erotic and dangerous stuff in it to keep us on our toes while our brains sizzle from confusion overload. Will no one give Lynch a TV series of his own, a "Twin Peaks" for the new century? Please.

These are 10 movies I'd happily see again and will keep at home on video so I can.

Roasted Apple Bread Pudding

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Bread pudding sound easy enough but it can easily turn soggy, eggy, and dull – really nothing more than a bowl of sickbed custard. Bread pudding, after all, is primarily about bread, some of which ought to be crispy with good chew. Bad bread pudding is fine fare for 2-year-olds but a good recipe ought to have character enough to please even a hulking defensive back.

Having worked with bread pudding recipe before, I knew the basic drill. One whisks together a custard base (eggs, diary, sugar, flavorings), soaks some of the bread (but not all), adds the rest of the bread as a topping, and then off into the oven. Some recipes call for a water bath but I was hoping to avoid this complication.

I tested milk, cream and combinations and settled on a 50/50 ratio for the best texture. I cut back on the total liquid since a layer of custard formed on the bottom of the baking pan. Bread pudding is often made with whole eggs plus yolks and I settled on three whole and two yolks. (More yolks tasted too eggy; no yolks produced an anemic pudding.)

As for the bread, I found I preferred cubed to sliced bread since cubes soak in the custard more evenly and have a slightly firmer texture once baked. A bakery style sandwich loaf cut into one-inch cubes is ideal – forget about challah and brioche since both produce a soggy, wet bread pudding. Only soaking three quarters of the bread in advance of baking gives one a nice crisp topping since the remaining bread is brushed with melted butter and then sprinkled with sugar. A 325 degree oven avoids the need for a water bath since a moderate oven will not overbake the perimeter of the pudding.

As for the roasted apples, they gave me some trouble. Raw apple pieces added to the pudding mixture were a disaster, turning out half-cooked pieces with little flavor. Next, I peeled, cored and cut four apples and placed them on a jelly roll pan, sprinkled them with 1/2 cup sugar, and then baked them at 425 degrees. This produced a hard, caramelized syrup on the bottom of the pan so I ended up with just a tablespoon of sugar and a 375 degree oven. The apples took on a bit of color without burning and they had a lot of flavor.

Bread pudding is best served not on its own, but with some sort of topping or accompaniment. Try beating a mixture of sour cream, plain yogurt, and heavy cream or simply flavor whipped cream with maple syrup. Vanilla ice cream also works well. Be sure to serve it warm.

ROASTED APPLE BREAD PUDDING

If you want to skip the apples, just skip them! You can also try this recipe with pears. Measuring 8 cups of cubed bread is a little tricky. Don't press down hard on the bread to measure – simply add the pieces to an 8-quart measuring cup, making sure that the pieces stack fairly evenly. To save time, roast the apples when the bread is soaking.

4 large apples, peeled, cored, and sliced into half-inch pieces
3/4 cup plus 2 tablespoons granulated sugar
3 large eggs plus 2 yolks
2 1/4 cups whole milk
2 1/4 cups heavy cream
2 1/2 teaspoons vanilla extract
3 tablespoons bourbon
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
8 cups firm white bakery bread, sandwich or Pullman loaf preferred, cut into 1-inch cubes
1 1/2 tablespoon unsalted butter, melted

1. Heat oven to 425 degrees. Place apples on a buttered jellyroll pan and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon granulated sugar. Roast until softened with some brown spots, about 15 minutes. Lower oven to 325. Butter a 9 x 13-inch baking dish.

2. Whisk the eggs and 3/4 cup sugar together in a large bowl until well blended. Whisk in the next 6 ingredients (milk through nutmeg). Add 6 cups of the bread pieces and toss thoroughly to moisten. Allow to sit for 15 minutes.

3. Transfer the mixture to prepared baking dish and gently stir in apples. Top evenly with the reserved 2 cups bread cubes, pushing down gently so they are about halfway submerged. Brush the exposed tops with the melted butter and sprinkle the top with the remaining tablespoon of sugar. Place in the oven and bake for about 45 minutes or until the bread pudding is golden brown, is beginning to rise up on the sides and the center still jiggles slightly. Let stand for 30 to 45 minutes before serving. Serve warm with whipped cream (and a splash of maple syrup) or vanilla ice cream.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 2

It may be difficult to get back to business today. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 6:16 a.m. until 6:34 p.m., when it enters Virgo. In addition, an applying polarity of Venus and Jupiter continues to generate an upbeat mood. People will be sociable and cooperative. You can make gains developing projects that need financial or moral support from others.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 3

Planetary influences turn around completely today. The moon travels in Virgo, forming a stressful alignment to Saturn in the morning and Pluto this evening. Sidestep worries, self-doubts. Ignore the criticism and do what your conscience tells you. Take on a full work agenda. It is better to finish projects already begun rather than starting anything new. Mercury moves into Aquarius at 4:38 p.m. Mercury will begin retrograde travel when it reaches 14 1/2-degrees of Aquarius, January 18.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 4

At 2:30 a.m. the Virgo moon opposes fiery Mars and becomes inactive. Go on a cleanup campaign today. Get your life in order. Stock up on healthy foods and vitamins. Get back on track with physical fitness regimens. The green light for new starts goes on at 8:23 p.m., when the moon enters Libra. This is a wonderful evening for social or romantic activities.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5

This is one of the few days this month that rates high for launching ventures, making decisions or purchases. Pull out all the stops. Influences are particularly favorable before 11:39 a.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. Because the moon travels in Libra, this day also rates high for meeting people, establishing new relationships. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:55 p.m. A new moon will culminate January 13.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 6

A Libra moon continues to place the focus on key relationships. This morning is ideal for spending quality time with loved ones. If you have been experiencing problems with another, now is a time when you can iron out differences. Open the doors to a higher level of communication; be willing to compromise. The Libra moon forms a harmonious contact to Uranus at 11:05 a.m. and becomes inactive until 11:41 p.m., when it enters Scorpio.

MONDAY, JANUARY 7

A Scorpio moon generates a serious mood today and tomorrow. On the other hand, lunar alignments to Mercury and Neptune can make for a slow start to this day. Stay alert and use common sense. Others may be pensive, moody, distracted. You can be most productive, if you focus on work or study projects in the afternoon and evening. Influences also rate high for making repairs and troubleshooting problems. You can cut through obstacles and achieve significant breakthroughs.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 8

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda today. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until tomorrow. Instead, tackle jobs that have been left hanging and finish them. Influences are also prime for developing creative projects, like art, music, poetry. You can find new ways to express feelings you usually cannot. Pay attention to your intuition. At 4:03 p.m. the Scorpio moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day.

The Royal Tenenbaums (B+)

Is anyone in as many movies this year as Gene Hackman? He robs cleverly in "Heist" and helps out the aviator in "Behind Enemy Lines" and here manages to father a trio of geniuses, then divorce and leave their mother and reduce his offspring to incompetent twits, then come back under the guise of imminent death and manage to screw up everybody all over again. Give him the Omnipresence Award of the Year for a Male Actor and see what next year brings.

"The Royal Tenenbaums," with its punning title - the paterfamilias' given name is Royal and his family is possessed of enough collective amour propre to think of itself as regal - is of that sub-genre of film that collectors of puns, in-jokes and sly references for niche audiences find irresistible. Will you not disgorge an ongoing titter at the presence of two curly headed pre-teenaged smarty-pants scamps, sons of Royal's hitherto brilliant investor son Chas, named Ari and Uzi? Chas, played by Ben Stiller, the child of real mixed parentage - their family always celebrated Festivus - has with one blow given us one kid with a Hebrew name, the other that of a serious weapon. The Jewish thing is nearly subterranean, as Royal at one point makes reference to his half-Hebraic lineage, and the surname is Jewish-sounding while it is also, if given one vowel change, the German word for Christmas tree. Go figure.

The erstwhile Mrs. Tenenbaum, Etheline (Anjelica Huston), keeps a pencil in her hair and an accountant (a totally refined Danny Glover) at her beck; he would like to be also at her call, as husband #2; Royal insults him with just this jot shy of really race-baiting epithets, as he schemes not only to be let back into the family house but also into Etheline's life.

Adopted daughter Margot (Gwyneth Paltrow, looking like a raccoon - it takes beaucoup chutzpah to uglify Gwyneth), once a budding playwright, now a cigarette smoker, is bored by her bizarre husband (Bill Murray), who conducts harmless and pointless experiments on a dorky kid, and is in lust with her neighbor, Eli Cash (Owen Wilson, with whom Gene Hackman stars in "Behind Enemy Lines"), though her step-brother (Luke Wilson), once a tennis star but now not, is in love with her.

The superannuated family servant is played by Kumar Pallana and given the name Pagoda, which has nothing to do with Indians or Pakistanis, of which the character Pagoda is one or the other. The household is like something out of a time-warp of Kaufman and Hart's "You Can't Take It With You," sharing living space with "The Man Who Came to Dinner."

Everybody is miserable except maybe Eli, who wears cowboy gear and is suddenly a hugely popular author who spends time with strange people and is six arrows shy of a full quiver, Ari and Uzi. But so is Royal, who is the consummate operator weaseling his way, through every imaginable con, back, he hopes, into the hearts both of the indomitable Etheline and the wretchedly unhappy trio of children whose lives, they think, he has ruined just by holding out the promise of eternal paternal love and then leaving. They are all the weakest link. Good bye.

Count the puns, tote up the arcane references, gather the pop-cult references (to an era ostensibly ours but in actuality that of an earlier decade) and settle back in anticipation not of a film-full of cackling belly laughs but rather of gentle guffaws and knowing chortles.

13th Annual Boston Bruins Wives' Charity Carnival

The United Way Unity Fund
It's never felt better to give.
United Way of Massachusetts Bay established the UNITY FUND to pay tribute to the many precious lives we lost on September 11, 2001. Each had individual dreams, personal hopes, lifelong passions. This living, breathing memorial keeps their spirits alive by restoring hope to the thousands of ordinary citizens right here in Eastern Massachusetts who are suffering due to the ripple effects of the attacks on America. All proceeds from the Carnival will be used to provide counseling, promote tolerance, support the increased demand for food pantry services, offer emergency assistance and help local individuals who have been laid off. 100% of every dollar donated to the UNITY FUND will be used to assist local families and children.

Showdown with DOE

Officials seek full funding for SBA

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The wagons are circling for what could be a showdown at the OK corral later this month at state Department of Education offices in Malden.

Town Manager Mark Haddad has mustered the troops from surrounding towns and, along with local legislators, hopes to demonstrate solidarity of purpose before the DOE on Jan. 22.

"It would be catastrophic to future budgets if we are not reimbursed for the project on time."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

At stake is — not if, but when — Cohasset and nearby towns of Norwell, Scituate, Hull, Duxbury and Pembroke will start to be reimbursed for the state's share of the towns' multi-million dollar school building projects.

The effect of the delay will make a significant dent in the pocketbooks of taxpayers, who will have to make payments on the entire school building mortgage until the state kicks in its share. For Cohasset that could mean an additional $700-plus a year for the owner of a home valued at about $500,000.

"It would be catastrophic to future budgets if we are not reimbursed for the project on time," Haddad said.

The DOE has said it plans to cut back by more than half — from about $52 million to $20 million — the amount it would have put toward new school building assistance grants next year to free up money for special education and other programs in a weak economy. There are currently 300 projects on the waiting list for reimbursement.

If the DOE continues putting only $20 million toward new construction grants, because if its place on the waiting list, Cohasset would have to wait 10 years rather than five to start receiving payments on the 60 percent promised by the state for the town's $40 million renovation and expansion of the Deer Hill and middle-high schools. Deer Hill is ranked 98 and the middle-high school, 130 on the list. Many other towns are in the same fix, Haddad said.

Town Finance Director Michael Buckley was surfing around the DOE Web site when he discovered a department advisory spelling out what could be bad news for taxpayers: there was no guarantee that grants would be awarded within the allowable five-year period for temporary borrowing.

"I don't think they wanted anyone to find out," Buckley said.

But Jeff Wulfson, associate commissioner of school finance, said the DOE never made any promises on how long communities would have to wait for reimbursement.

He explained school building assistance grants have a cumulative effect on the department's budget.

"If we give $20 million in grants this year — then next year's budget must include that $20 million." He added those grants are locked in every year for the next 20 years. What the DOE is cutting back is expansion of the program because towns, which are already receiving reimbursement, will continue to do so.

"Clearly there is not enough money," he said. "So we have to delay things a couple of years. We are all hopeful, within a year or two the economy will recover." He also pointed out the towns will ultimately get whatever money is due them.

Wulfson said even with the signif-

ZBA to take center stage

AvalonBay project will be a challenge

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Zoning Board of Appeals wants to get an "A" on Chapter 40-B.

The ZBA — which is one of the more cerebral town boards whose members can usually be found working quietly together into the night as they analyze nuances in the zoning bylaw — is about to become the center of attention.

The ZBA expressed some concern that there's considerable misinformation being floated around town.

But not to worry, the studious five-member board has done its homework and will have Town Counsel Rick Hucksan, who has expertise on the complex affordable-housing law, at its side during negotiations which are expected to start with AvalonBay Communities early this year.

If the ZBA has its way Chapter 40-B — dubbed the "Anti-Snob Zoning Act" — will become almost as familiar a term as "Proposition 2-1/2" to residents and town officials as plans for the 254-unit, rental apartment complex moves forward. The size and scope of AvalonBay and the fact it will be built on one of the few remaining tracts of industrially zoned land in town, make it controversial.

The ZBA expressed some con-

Paramedic program pays off

50 percent of calls require ALS

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Paramedics in Cohasset are already paying off — not only in saving lives but also in more revenue for the town, which helps pay for the program that started 14 months ago.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said paramedics, who use Advanced Life Support, have enabled the fire department to provide better emergency care.

"This is absolutely a great program," he said.

"It gives people advanced care which is equivalent to an emergency room."
— Fire Chief Roger Lincoln

A recent 12-month total for ambulance receipts shows an increase of more than $75,000 to the town coffers. From November 2000 to November 2001, the town grossed $212,160. The year before in the same amount of time, the town received $135,519.

The ALS program, which started in November 2000, includes six firefighters, who are also trained as paramedics.

Having paramedics on staff allows the department to provide more advanced treatment. Without ALS, a heart-attack victim, for example, would have to endure a 20-minute ride to South Shore Hospital before they were treated with life-saving drugs. Paramedics are able to administer those drugs as well as employ a heart defibrillator.

"It gives people advanced care which is equivalent to an emergency room," Lincoln said. "It gives them more of a chance to survive."

Fire chief Lincoln to retire

Leaves in July after 33 years of service

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

After 33 years fighting fires and protecting the residents of Cohasset, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln is retiring.

He announced this week that he will step down from the fire department in July, leaving Town Manager Mark Haddad with a big pair of shoes to fill.

Lincoln said he felt this was the best time to leave his post.

"I just reached the point were I have the appropriate combination of age and experience to retire," he said.

In 1993, Lincoln became the first local fire chief in more than a decade. The prior three chiefs all came from out-of-state: Martin Dooley, Daniel Brock and John Nadeau.

Lincoln graduated from Cohasset High School in 1965 and holds an associate degree in fire science from Massasoit Community College. He has lived in Cohasset his entire life and is the fourth generation of Lincolns to live in the town. Haddad says he will be missed.

"I've enjoyed working with Roger immensely," Haddad said. "He was a great fire chief."

Lincoln said he will enjoy his retirement, though he's made no specific plans.

"All I know is that I won't be getting up in the middle of the night to fight a fire," he said. He added he is

Citizens show early interest in holding elected office

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Monday and Tuesday were the first two days citizens could pull nominations papers for the April 6 Town Election and they did.

Jane Pescatore of Lantern Lane will run for the open seat on the school committee being vacated by Stephanie Noble, who is not seeking reelection. She has been involved in the PSO since 1995 and as president of the organization, has attended school committee meetings for the last five years. She said it is time for her to go to the other side of the table.

"I think there are a lot of changes on the horizon and I have experience with the school system and could make informed decisions," she said.

Pescatore said having three children all who are, or have made their way through Cohasset's schools, has provided her an invaluable familiarity with the system.

She added due to tough economic times, she does not intend to seek or accept donations to her campaign.

"I'm hoping to communicate with the people in town without taking their money," she said. She wants to reach all members of the community and let them know how their tax dollars are being spent.

"It's not about me as a candidate," she said. "It's about the schools."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said he will be seeking re-election on the Board of Selectmen. He said the hardest work in his first term has been negotiating the Greenbush deal.

"It was a long process and I'd like to see it through to the end," he said.

Mary Granville, 100 Beach St., will seek a seat on the Board of Assessors. Granville has worked full-time as a real estate appraiser since 1978. While she concedes appraising is slightly different than assessing, she still feels she can make a positive contribution to the board.

"I think I could add a lot of value because of my experience," she said. Granville was the past president on the Massachusetts Board of Real Estate Appraising.

Roger Lowe, also of 100 Beach St., plans to run for reelection to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees. Lowe is completing his second term on the board and said he has worked the last six years to see the new library come to fruition and he would like to see it through.

"There's still work that needs to be done and I would like to involved with it," he said. Lowe is also on the library building committee.

Roger Q. Hill, 17A Highland Ave., reserved commenting on his campaign until a later date. He intends to run for a position on the Board of Selectmen.

The last day to pick up the papers is Feb.14 and all papers need to be returned by Feb. 19. To be put on the ballot, a candidate must garner 50 signatures from registered voters.

For more information contact Marion Douglas at the Town Clerk's office, 781-383-4100.

Positions for elected office

Nomination papers for the annual town election for 2002 will be available on Monday, Jan. 7, at the Town clerk's Office. In order to hold an elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be available:

Selectmen - TWO for three years
Town Moderator - ONE for three years
Town Clerk - ONE for three years
School Committee - ONE for three years
Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - THREE for three years
Assessor - ONE for three years
Board of Health - ONE for three years
Cohasset Housing Authority - ONE for five years
Planning Board - ONE for five years
Recreation Commission - THREE for five years
Sewer Commission - ONE for three years
Water Commission - ONE for three years

Friday, March 8, is the last day to register for the annual Town Meeting, Saturday, March 30, and the annual Town Election, Saturday, April 6.

This week in COHASSET

Meeting schedule

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Jan. 8.

Cohasset Conservation Commission, Jan. 10, 7:30p.m.

Library Building Committee, Jan. 29, 9:30 a.m.

Water Commission, Jan. 10, 7:30 p.m. at 339 King St.

Committee on Town History, Jan. 21, 7:30 p.m. at the Lothrop House

Zoning Board of Appeals, Jan. 24, 7:30 p.m.

Growth and Development, Jan. 10, 7:30 p.m.

Assessors, Jan. 10, 3 p.m.

Open Space, Jan. 16, 7:30 p.m.

Planning Board, Jan. 16, 7:30 p.m.

Sewer Commission, Jan. 14, 6 p.m.

All meeting are held at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Schedule set

Selectmen unanimously approved the schedule for their meetings that will take the board through annual election in April. They will be meeting every Tuesday except for the following dates:

Tuesday, Jan. 22, there will be no meeting due to Martin Luther King Day.

Tuesday, Feb. 19, there will be no meeting due to President's Day.

Tuesday, March 12, there will be no meeting.

Tuesday, April 2, there will be no meeting.

At a previous meeting, Selectmen set Annual Town Meeting for March 30 and Annual Town Election for April 6.

Traffic count

Due to reports of speeding cars on Pleasant Street, Norfolk County Engineers conducted a study there last month. They found the average speed on the street was 23 miles per hour. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the police currently enforce a 30 mph speed limit on Pleasant Street, which has no posted speed limit signs. Haddad said to set a speed limit on Pleasant Street would be detrimental because it would set the limit at 30 mph or higher. Haddad said he will have the police step up patrols of Pleasant Street and will continue to monitor the situation.

Brown on ZAC

Selectman Merle Brown was appointed to the newly formed Zoning Advisory Committee as the board's representative at its last meeting . Brown felt he should represent the board because of his involvement with the formation of the ZAC.

Liquor licenses

Selectmen approved three, one-day liquor licenses for the South Shore Arts Center this week. On Jan. 18, March 1, April 19 the center will be able to provide wine for its open houses.

No sticker shock

The Recycling Committee recommended the sticker fee for the RTF be reduced from $50 to $35. This will take effect once the stickers are sold again this spring. Selectmen unanimously supported the change and Town Manager Mark Haddad said he accounted for the difference in the budget. Selectman Merle Brown said he hopes in the future, the price will be lowered further.

"Hopefully we can get it down to $10 in a couple of years," Brown said.

Police chief update

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he will be meeting with the police chief search committee tonight. The committee is still trying to narrow down the list of candidates to a handful of finalists. Haddad said he hopes to announce the chief before annual Town Meeting in April.

Veterans memorials

Selectmen approved a request from the Veterans Memorial Committee to put an article on the annual Town Meeting warrant regarding repairs and upgrades to various memorials around town. The committee asked for $15,000.

The committee stated the money was needed to repair the Herman E. Daley sign, refurbish Norman M. Todd park, repair and improve Peter Cogill Square, make a plaque and dedicate a square to Allen A. Buffum, refinish the William C. Laidlaw square plaque, erect a plaque for Howard R. Gleason Road, and see what would be appropriate for a Perry H. Johnson plaque.

Town Manager Mark Haddad recommended the selectmen approve the article.

"This is a worthwhile cause that can be done at little cost to the town," he said. "This is money well spent."

FY'03 town budget maintains services

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Despite the current economy, Cohasset's budget for Fiscal Year 2003 looks quite healthy.

"We're in pretty good shape," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Haddad presented his town operating budget proposal to the Board of Selectmen this week.

"Our philosophy this year is the same as in the past," he said. "We will continue to provide a budget that maintains the services the town is accustomed to without an override."

The anticipated tax rate for Fiscal Year 2003 is $11.99. This is a 51 cent increase in the tax rate from FY 2002. Currently, a house valued at $565,700 has an average tax bill of $6,437 — in FY 2003 the same home could see an increase of $286 bringing a tax bill to $6,723.

Haddad said he asked all department heads to keep spending to a minimum while continuing current services. With this in mind, he said a general override of Proposition 2-1/2 would not be necessary. Proposition 2-1/2 is a state law that limits the amount a town can raise the tax rate with out an override.

The only new initiative in the budget is a request to add two workers to the Department of Public Works. Because of the addition to Woodside Cemetery, the new park on the former Hagerty property, and new Little League fields in the future, Haddad said it is necessary to protect these areas by keeping them maintained. The two employees will be paid approximately $33,000 a year.

"I'd like to see these areas well maintained," said Selectman Michael Sullivan.

As has been the case in past years, the School Budget was one of the most complicated areas.

"We will continue to provide a budget that maintains the services the town is accustomed to without an override."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The School Committee is hard pressed to determine its financial needs for the coming year nine-months in advance. It has been common practice to allow the School Committee to come back to special Town Meeting in the fall with additional requests. Haddad said he would like to continue this process and is confident the town can absorb a 6 percent increase in the budget which he is recommending. The 6 percent increase is equivalent to approximately $600,000.

Haddad said the School Committee is still reviewing its budget which right now, requires a larger increase than the town can take. He said the town could not support the increase unless it got an override, or cut from other areas which he does not want to do. Haddad plans to work closely with the School Committee to resolve the differences. Haddad also raised the flag concerning shrinking state aid.

In FY 2003 the town will see a drop in state aid which will cover 10.47 percent of the budget. In FY 2002, the state covered 10.83 percent of the budget and in 2001 covered 11.83 percent. Because of the drop, the town will need to rely more heavily on the tax rate, estimated receipts and free cash to cover expenses.

The budget anticipates new revenues close to $1 million in FY 2003. In his report, Haddad said some of the significant new revenues include $100,000 from the Overlay Surplus account to help balance the budget. An overlay account is established annually to fund anticipated tax abatements, exemptions and uncollected taxes in that year.

About $10,000 will come from the Cemetery Sale of Lots Account to pay the debt service on the Woodside Cemetery improvements, as well as $10,000 from the Waterways Account to offset the cost of the mooring removal service.

The funding of the School Building Assistance program will have no direct bearing on the budget for FY2003. However, if the program continues to be funded at its current low levels, tax rates could sky rocket in the future.

Greenbush foes show how train money could be spent

By Rick Collins
RICK.COLLINS@STATEHOUSENEWS.COM

Two South Shore legislators have taken the unusual step of lobbying against a massive public transit project for their district, and are enticing their colleagues to join them by promising that their opposition will free up funds for projects back home.

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, are calling the $440 million Greenbush commuter rail project too expensive and environmentally damaging and instead are pushing for a region-wide system of feeder buses and ferry boats for a third of the price. The result, they say, will be a cheaper, more efficient public transit system that frees up as much as $300 million for capital projects elsewhere the MBTA says it doesn't have the money to do.

"It's our job to tell legislators that this does effect your district and here's how," Bradley said Monday. "There's money being spent in our district and we believe we can spend less with the same result and that means more money the state can use in their districts."

The Greenbush project would extend commuter rail service along 17.7 miles of track from Braintree through Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate. It has faced more than a decade of delays, lawsuits and some citizen outrage. But the project also enjoys plenty of support and has forged ahead in recent years.

Project funding is included in the MBTA's five-year capital project plan.

The two legislators sponsored a slide-show presentation Monday featuring former environmental affairs secretary John Bewick, who heads up a Hingham-based anti-train group called Advocates for Transportation Alternatives. Bewick's presentation slammed the MBTA's analysis of alternatives to the train.

"It's our job to tell legislators that this does effect your district and here's how."
— State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham

According to Bewick, by hiring bus companies to provide service to existing water shuttles in Quincy, Hingham and Hull, the MBTA would service 4,189 passengers daily instead of the 1,708 that would ride the Greenbush line at a savings of $300 million. That breaks down, he said to a cost of $7,500 per rider for the bus, and boats compared to $306,536 per train rider. The state is currently in the process of taking over the failing Quincy ferry service from General Dynamics.

Other strategies include expanding parking capacity at the Braintree and Quincy Adams Red Line stations, and building a commuter link from the vacant South Weymouth Naval Air Station to the South Weymouth commuter rail stop along the Plymouth branch of the Old Colony line.

He also said the bus and ferry alternative will prevent the train from running through 22 historical districts and 43 grade crossings – both numbers being the most of any commuter rail project in the state – and prevent 248 homes from being affected by diesel engine fumes.

The money instead, said Bewick, could be spent on other public transit projects "where it is needed." He gave a list of projects that have been postponed because of a lack of funds, including the $20 million overhaul of both Orient Heights and Maverick stations on the Blue Line, the $275 million Blue Line expansion to Lynn, and $20 million construction project of a new Orange Line station at Assembly Square in Somerville. The money could also be used, he said, to help build a connector from South Station to the Green Line and bring back train service along Washington Street in Roxbury.

John Carlisle, spokesman for state Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, cast doubt upon Bewick's proposal. "We'd be very interested in seeing the plan and checking the numbers and their credibility," he said. "There have been environmental reviews, transportation studies and other independent reviews that have taken place that show that Greenbush moves the most amount of people in the most environmentally friendly way for the most reasonable cost."

looking forward to spending more time with his family.

Lincoln was influenced by firefighters very early in his life and sees this as a reason he became involved with the work. As a child, he was raised near a fire station and grew to know many of the men.

"I would chase after the trucks when they left," he said. "It seemed so exciting."

Lincoln said his biggest accomplishments during his tenure, included adding four firefighting positions to the force, continuing to keep the equipment up-to-date, and instituting a paramedic program.

"The ability to try and make changes, and to see them through, gives you a satisfying feeling," he said.

The town's six paramedics can offer a wide range of treatments competitive with the type of care found in a hospital's emergency room.

"Going from offering BLS (Basic Life Support) to ALS (Advanced Life Support) was a big step for the department," Lincoln said.

According to Lincoln, the hardest part of the job is the budget process. Trying to maintain a high level of service with limited financial resources can prove quite difficult, he said. His advice for the next chief is to not take budget cuts personally.

"The budget process is really frustrating," Lincoln said.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln plans to retire in July.

Haddad said he hasn't decided a process for selecting the next fire chief but it will probably be one similar to the police chief search, which is underway. He said appointing a departmental head is always a tough decision.

This will be Haddad's third appointment in less than a year. Haddad is expected to announce a new police chief by April. And DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield will step down at the end of March.

"I'm starting to take this personally," Haddad joked. "Those three departments are the most critical to the town so any appointment gains extra importance."

program, the fire department responded to 273 calls that required basic life support and 292 calls that required advanced life support. This means more than 50 percent of all the calls have required advanced life support.

According to town Finance Director Michael Buckley, the increased revenue is due to the higher charge for an ALS (advanced life support) response. The standard rate charged for a BLS (basic life support) response is $228.75 while the flat rate for ALS response is $300.99. These charges do not include additional costs such as, oxygen, IVs and mileage.

After an ambulance run, the town sends the bill to ComStar in Ipswich, which bills the patient's insurance company. ComStar charges a 7 percent surcharge to the town for its services.

The town is not making any money on the program as it costs more to have the paramedics in the fire department. Haddad said when the issue was brought before Town Meeting; voters were promised the program would generate 50 percent of the increased budget, which it has.

The movement towards offering ALS service began in 1998, when Haddad negotiated with the fire department union to have the next eight people hired, be trained paramedics.

"The union has been unbelievably cooperative," Haddad said in a previous interview. "We couldn't have done it without their support."

Two paramedics were hired in early 1999 to replace two retiring firefighters, and then four were hired in the fall of 1999 after a special Town Meeting vote allocated the money to expand the fire department to 24 members.

Cohasset successfully lobbied the state Department of Public Health for a waiver allowing the town to offer ALS services with six paramedics, instead of the required eight. There are two EMTs currently in paramedic training.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

WINTRY WEATHER

Hello Cohasset. It is wet, snowy and cold as I write this week's column, was it me who wanted snow and winter? Hmmmm, I may be rethinking that unless we get a lot more of the white stuff at once. I am still in amazement that we are in January of 2002! I feel like last New Year's Eve just ended and here we are. What an incredible difference a year makes, a month makes, a day makes etc. I really hope that we have a more positive year in 2002 in so many ways.

I have a favor to ask of all of you reading this column. I know that the holidays have been hectic for us all and that with everything else that has been happening around the world, the Around Town column is the last thing on many peoples minds. Remember this, family, friends and community are key in life and your news, event information, family and friend photos are all a part of our town. Please make sure to send it all in to me no later than Monday mornings by noon. It really does make a difference in so many peoples weekly routines!

BEACH BASH!

Here is a great way for everyone to enjoy a night at the beach in the middle of winter. Step into summer and shake off the cold at the South Shore Art Center's "Beach Bash", Saturday, Jan. 26, at Atlantica Restaurant on Cohasset Harbor from 7 p.m.-12 a.m.. The entire restaurant will be transformed into a summertime resort with beach games, lifeguards, summer sounds and other warm-weather diversions.

Local artists have been working hard creating unique masterpieces and in addition to those wonderful auction pieces, their are so many more to bid on! Vacation homes, a diamond bracelet, fine wine and the list just continues on. The live and silent auctions will continue all night long. Food will be served that will make your mouth water and the popular local band, "The Grateful Dads will keep guests dancing all evening. Tickets for this event are $100 per person($85 for members of the Art Center) and a portion of this cost is tax-deductible. For reservations or more information, call 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY!

We have a little girl in our town who is turning six years old this Saturday, Jan. 12 and yes, she happens to be my god-daughter! Miss Tricia Litchfield is celebrating her wonderful day and I know that so many of us are all wishing her a very, happy birthday!

Tricia's grandfather is Harold Litchfield and I want to send him a belated happy birthday as well as wishing Tricia's Auntie Julie a happy birthday as well. Tricia wanted to see your names in the paper for your birthdays and of course, couldn't wait for her big day! Happy Birthday to all of you.

NEW ARRIVAL

A wonderful Christmas present was given to Dr. James and Stephanie Popkin and their daughter Kellie of Cohasset. Bridget Noelle Popkin was born on Dec. 17, 2001 and weighed in at 5 lbs., 11 oz. and was 18-1/2 ins. long. Welcome little one to our world and to your family who, I am sure were so happy and full of joy with two little girls on Christmas Day.

QUILT SHOW

The Second Congregational Church will hold its 9th annual Quilt Show and Luncheon on Saturday, March 2, 2002. Proceeds from this event benefit the "Children's AIDS Program" in Mattapan and "Reach Out and Read", a program at Boston Medical Center's pediatric clinic which provides young children with a new book at every check up. Every year, there are 55-60 different quilts displayed. If you would like to show a quilt, call DeeDee at the church office at 781-383-0345 or Carol Sandblom at 781-383-1812 by Jan. 21. I know that many of you in our town and surrounding ones as well, have quilting talent and these hidden beauties would look so beautiful hanging on display for this fantastic benefit. Pick up the phone and arrange for your quilt to be seen.

COLLEGE GRAD

Robert Vanderpool, son of John and Geraldine Vanderpool of Cohasset, earned a bachelor of science degree in business administration in December from Saint Michael's College. Robert is a Cohasset High School graduate. Congratulations!

RELAY FOR LIFE

The Planning Committee for the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset is ready to begin and they are encouraging anyone from Cohasset to join, as well as residents in surrounding towns. If you are interested, please call Mary at 1-888-648-4880, ext.229 or, event chair, Gordon Behrer at 617-770-7989 or gcbehrer@aol.com. The first meeting of the planning committee is scheduled for Jan. 17 from 6:30-8p.m. and is being held at the Cohasset High School cafeteria, 143 Pond St. The dates for the Relay are set for May 17-18 at CHS.

That is all for this week. Make sure to get all your news to me no later than Monday by noon. All photos can be dropped off at Cohasset News in an envelope marked, "Around Town, Cohasset Mariner."

Mr. and Mrs. Brendan Kinchla

Kinchla - Press

Olga Press, the daughter of Alya and Nathan Press of Manchester, Conn., married Brendan Kinchla, the son of Nancy Kinchla of Cohasset and John Kinchla of Ridgefield, Calif. on Aug. 18, 2001, at The Colonnade, Glastonbury, Conn. Justice of the Peace, Joseph Reardon officiated at the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her matron of honor was Helen Viaznensky of Avon, Conn. Bridesmaids were Alison Kinchla of Cohasset, Ilona Ryvkin, of Manchester, Conn., Lauri Taft of Milton.

John Kinchla of Cohasset served as best man. Ushers included Daniel Kinchla of Cohasset, Eric Viaznensky, Matt Viaznensky both of Avon, Conn.

The bride is a graduate of Brandis University and is employed at Hurwitz Group in market research.

Her husband is a graduate of Berklee College of Music and is employed at Unicco, Inc. in computer specialist systems.

The reception was held at the colonnade in Glastonbury, Conn.

After a wedding trip to Italy, the couple will reside in Newton.

Historical Society welcomes new presidents

By Evan Schiff

STAFF PHOTO/JAY CHAPMAN

Kathy O'Malley, left, and Paul Kozol are the new co-presidents of the Cohasset Historical Society.

When the Cohasset Historical Society elected Kathy O'Malley and Paula Kozol to represent its interests as co-presidents — it anticipated the women would work professionally to accomplish the goals of the society. However, no one envisioned their relationship would blossom further.

"We've become great friends," glowed O'Malley.

The two had never met before the society's first meeting after special Town Meeting in October when they were both elected to office. They both agreed their personal relationship has buoyed their professional one.

"Being so compatible makes it a joy to work together," Kozol said. Both added having co-presidents in the society is a necessity because of the large work load associated with the position.

O'Malley said she concentrates on the day-to-day operations of the society while Kozol presides over the society's meetings and represents the board at town functions.

Kozol has been working with museums for more than 30 years. She worked at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston for 13 years before becoming the archivist at the Isabella Stewart Gardner museum. She is also the curator of the Hull Lifesaving Museum and has a primary interest in maritime collections.

O'Malley has had an interest in history her entire life. She worked for the Women's City Club of Boston, which was located in two historic buildings on Beacon Street, for 15 years. She said she also has a wealth of experience writing grants, which comes in handy.

One of the goals of the co-presidents is to become more involved with the school system. However, their current focus is the ambitious task of raising $100,000 for improvements to all the Historical Society's buildings.

The society owns three historic buildings in town that also serve as museums, which includes the society's headquarters, the Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer St.; and the Maritime Museum and John Wilson House on Elm Street in the village.

All three need repairs. The Lothrop House needs the roof repaired as well as an exterior paint job. The Maritime Museum needs upgraded lighting, display cases, and signage. Perhaps the most expensive endeavor is to the Wilson House in which drainage problems need to be corrected. There is also a need to create handicap access at the Wilson House and the Maritime Museum as well as providing museum quality storage and display for the gowns and textiles at the locations. The most pressing matter is addressing the drainage problems at the Wilson House which is estimated to cost more than $45,000.

This is the first capital campaign the Historical Society has embarked on since 1974 when the group raised enough money to purchase the Lothrop House. O'Malley said the current effort began under former president Martha Gjesteby and the two co-presidents are trying to sustain the momentum.

As of Jan. 7, the group has received 126 donations totaling almost $16,000. The average donation has been around $130 and the largest donation was close to $2,000.

"We are happy with any amount of money," O'Malley said. The society has received donations as small as $5 and welcomes any contributions.

Kozol said there are many reasons the community should make donations.

"It's Cohasset's heritage," she said. "It's something that should be preserved for future generations to enjoy."

The co-presidents said they will not wait for the entire sum of money to begin renovations, rather the society will begin construction as the money becomes available.

Kozol said the group is trying to work with other organizations to raise funds.

"We are going to approach the Community Preservation Committee for money," Kozol said. The CPC is an organization dedicated to preserving the town's present character through acquisition of open space and preservation of historic resources.

The society also is trying to work in conjunction with the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation in an attempt to create handicapped access to the two Elm Street museums. The CRC is a private organization that works in conjunction with the village revitalization task force for village improvements.

There will be a "thermostat" in between the two Elm Street museums designating how much money the society has raised. The sign was donated from the Cohasset Fire Department which used the sign in a similar fashion when it was raising money for its thermal imaging camera. David Hassan repainted the sign at no cost to the Historical Society, the women said.

The society is governed by 18 residents who form a board of trustees. The society has approximately 400 members with family memberships costing $30, and individual memberships listed at $20.

The Lothrop House is open Monday through Wednesdays 1 - 5 p.m. Historian David Wadsworth, 14 Summer St., is available on Mondays and Wednesdays to answer any questions. The museums on Elm Street are closed for the winter.

Community blood drive Jan. 16

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Jan. 16. The Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main St. and Summer St. from 1:30-7:30 p.m. As in the past, baby-sitting will be provided from 3-5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

The blood drive is being dedicated to the memory of the late Al Odermatt, a tireless worker for the cause for more than 50 years.

The American Red Cross is asking all eligible blood donors in the Cohasset area to give blood when the bloodmobile comes to Cohasset.

The best way to give blood for the first time is to come with a friend who is experienced in the donation process. New donors usually find the procedure easy and painless and most come back regularly to donate.

Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290 or the Red Cross at 1-800-448-3543.

Harbor Captain's Walk Community Design Workshop

Thursday, January 17 - 7:30pm
At the St. Anthony's Church Parish Center
129 South Main Street

Representatives of the Cecil Group, an urban landscape architectural firm, will present design details regarding safety, public access and aesthetic improvement opportunities around the perimeter of Cohasset Harbor.

Are all welcome to share ideas on design elements to address the demands of today's environment, as well as preserve the rich maritime history of the waterfront.

Discussion Items Include

✔ An improved sidewalk, designed to provide a safe area for walkers, runners, and bikers of all ages and abilities.

✔ Opportunities for designated public parking and bicycle lanes.

✔ Added amenities such as granite curbing, railings and pedestrian scale lighting.

If you would like additional information, please contact the CRC office at 781-383-2449.

EDITORIAL

Promises, promises

A very serious issue is facing us on the financial front. The state Department of Education says it won't be able to afford to reimburse school building projects on the same timetable, as has been its practice.

Slashing the amount of money for new grants for school construction by more than half — as is the plan — puts places like Cohasset in a real bind because the towns will have to wait longer to start receiving payments from the state to offset the cost of school building projects. Because state law only permits towns to borrow on a short-term basis for five years, Cohasset homeowners will have to start footing the full payments on the $40 million mortgage on the expanded and refurbished Deer Hill and middle-high school in 2005. This means the annual taxes on an average-valued home in town will be more than $700 higher (for up to five years) than they would be if the town receives the building assistance money on schedule.

Cohasset picked up on this new development quickly and sought help from our local legislative delegation, state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley. Now a meeting is scheduled on Jan. 22 with the Department of Education to discuss the issue. In addition to Cohasset officials, also attending will be representatives from other area towns, which are in the same fix.

We can only hope the DOE will be in a receptive mood. If not, then a legislative solution is possible — but Mr. Bradley and Mr. Hedlund would need support from their counterparts at the Statehouse.

We congratulate Town Manager Mark Haddad and Finance Director Michael Buckley for being ahead of the curve. They brought this to the forefront and sounded the alarm. Many other towns are just now waking up to the problem.

Let's hope the issue is resolved to everyone's satisfaction soon.

Thinking of running for local office?

If you have ever thought about running for selectmen, school committee, health board or other local office, then mark your calendar for Jan. 30.

The Hingham League of Women Voters will run its second informative workshop on what's involved in running a campaign — from dealing with the media, to campaign finance laws, understanding the responsibilities of the office, and much more. Future campaign managers may be interested, also. Last year's successful workshop was quite well attended.

The workshop will be held at 7:30 p.m. at Hingham Town Hall, 210 Central St., and is open to residents of Cohasset, Hull, Scituate, and Hingham.

Experienced candidates, campaign managers, and League members will provide pertinent advice on what to expect once you've made the decision to throw in your hat, or are simply testing the waters. Handouts on financial reporting and nominating deadlines, etc., will be available.

The deadline for filing nominating papers in most South Shore towns is imminent.

For further details, please call Patricia Facey, 781-383-0470.

Positions for elected office

Nomination papers for the annual town election for 2002 will be available on Monday, Jan. 7, at the Town clerk's Office. In order to hold an elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be available:

Selectmen - TWO for three years
Town Moderator - ONE for three years
Town Clerk - ONE for three years
School Committee - ONE for three years
Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library - THREE for three years
Assessor - ONE for three years
Board of Health - ONE for three years
Cohasset Housing Authority - ONE for five years
Planning Board - ONE for five years
Recreation Commission - THREE for five years
Sewer Commission - ONE for three years
Water Commission - ONE for three years

Friday, March 8, is the last day to register for the annual Town Meeting, Saturday, March 30, and the annual Town Election, Saturday, April 6.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

On the mend

TO THE EDITOR:

It's amazing to see how good and bad news brings out community warmth and support. We recently had both.

On Dec. 30 Kelsey was involved in a skiing accident. Those who know of her diving and gymnastic interests were shocked, as were those who simply heard about the accident. The short story is that she will be out of athletic workouts for one month after skiing out of control enough to have sustained an impact which broke three ribs, slightly lacerated her spleen, and partially collapsed a lung. Her doctor stated the injury was similar to that which Drew Bledsoe sustained. She's OK, and can participate in somewhat normal activities, but needs to be cautious as she fully heals through January. (Unlike the Bledsoe deal, Kelsey will remain "starting-daughter" for the remainder of her contract.)

Thanks to everybody who has approached us with their thoughts, concern, and wishes for speedy healing. Special thanks to the wonderful people at school for their day to day support as well.

Massport tries to kill runway injunction

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

Logan Airport expansion will be in the news again soon. Massport filed a lawsuit against Boston, "Massachusetts Port Authority vs. City of Boston, et al., Superior Court Civil Action No. 01-2731," to try to kill a long-standing injunction against the runway expansion project. In the aftermath of Sept. 11, Massport asked for and got a stay of all proceedings on the lawsuit. The stay runs out on Jan. 15. Massport could withdraw its suit and its expansion proposals to concentrate instead on building public confidence.

Logan's neighbors hope that balanced transportation development in the New England region and commitment to passenger security will now head Massport's priorities. Accelerated development of other transportation modes must increasingly keep the economy moving while aviation is adjusting its resources toward security. If future congestion-related delay develops at Logan, it can be reduced using existing well-tested models for spreading traffic beyond so called "peak hours" — without runway expansion and without cutting the airport's capacity.

After Sept. 11, Acting Governor Swift appointed a Special Advisory Task Force on Massport, to recommend changes. The Task Force findings reveal Massport's past priorities: "... the CEO's focus has previously been on external politics rather than the daily management of the organization. ...the concept of promotion has ballooned into a broader trade and tourism orientation that goes beyond the core mission."...

Massport should drop its lawsuit and its expansion efforts and work with its neighbors, not against us.

"The fragmentation of responsibility among three parties — the FAA, the airlines and airports — created a system where everyone was involved in aviation security, but no one was singularly responsible. ... Differing priorities and the inconsistent application of rules and regulations furthers this problem."

If you substitute "emissions pollution and noise" for "aviation security" in the preceding quote, you will see the complaints of neighboring cities and towns precisely in the context of the aviation crisis.

Massport should drop its lawsuit and its expansion efforts and work with its neighbors, not against us. We all want a strong economy and reliable security. Logan's neighbors want a clean environment and reliable protection of public health. If all parties worked together in good faith and with high professional standards, like the Task Force prescribes ("Massport's relationship with its local neighbors must be repaired."), we could get there.

Mary Ann Frye is a member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, southshorejet-pollution.org Special Advisory Task Force on Massport Recommendations can be seen in full at:

Rec Department issues safe ice advisory

With any outdoor skating area the ice should be tested before venturing on it. There are specific ways to test ice safety which do not include throwing debris such as rocks, sticks, etc. on the ice making it hazardous for everyone.

Rather, test the ice by the edge of a skating area by carefully stepping out 6 to 8 inches, proceeding carefully to about 2 feet out from the edge only if the ice appears to be safe under your weight. Chip the ice with a tool or stick until you can ascertain a rough idea as to the thickness of the ice. You should always have another person with you when doing this.

Many outdoor skating areas do not have the same thickness of ice universally over the area. Always be on guard for soft spots or thin ice which manifest from underground springs, drain pipes, etc. etc. This is especially true at Ellm's Meadow by the Spring Street/Cushing Road corner of the area due to drains off the hillside.

GENERAL SAFE ICE STANDARDS

	Degrees
Ice safe for:	0-30	30-40	40-50
Single Skaters:	1.75"	2.75"	6"
Couples:	2.75"	3.75"	8"
Crowds:	3.75"	4.75"	12"

Stay off of salt water ice completely.

These figures are for clear, fresh water ice only; for snow ice, add 2 inches; for water logged ice, add 3 inches; if skates cut in — go home. Salt water in mild climates is always treacherous, keep away from it. Also thickness in 40-50 degree column are safe depths for short periods of time only.

No Ellm's Meadow skating

The Cohasset Recreation Department said due to work being done in the well heads at Ellm's Meadow currently, the area will not be available for skating.

Ellm's Meadow, located at Cushing Road and Spring Street is a water level controlled, lighted skating area for residents to utilize until 9:30 p.m. nights. The current well head project should be completed by late January, at which time the dam boards will be replaced to collect water for ice. The area will be opened as soon as possible.

Nature folklore: wisdom of the ages

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

One of the many bald-faced hornet nests hanging high in trees around town. Could there be a severe winter in our future?

Back in the good old days, before science could explain most all things mysterious, the "whys" of the natural world were explained with folklore and myth. I've often written about our forebears' intimacy with the natural world, their use of nature's "signs" to tell time, to forecast the weather, to plant and harvest crops, to construct daily lives. Then, symbolism and legend attached to animals and plants. All of nature was empowered. Events like eclipses and meteor showers were feared because it was believed they were evidence that the gods had been angered and the world was coming to an end. When the darkness of winter settled in over the primal land, our ancestors burned fires and offered sacrifices to insure the return of the sun.

These days, though we understand most of the "whys" of nature, we can still be awed by her stories of survival, her moments of drama and beauty. And we can still be charmed by the folk traditions, that collective memoir of a long ago time. Indeed, many of us unwittingly retain a connection to that past. Think of all the superstitions we carry around - black cats, the number 13, cracks in the sidewalk - and all the folksy expressions that are part of our daily dialogue. Just the other day I heard someone say that it felt like it was going to snow. It reminded me of someone I knew on the Cape who used to say that he could smell the rain coming.

The link to the past, though, is tenuous. We can afford to have some fun with these quaint "wisdoms" because we know that the course of our day, the success of our day, doesn't depend on them. We don't need the wisdom to explain our world. But, imagine if we did. Imagine if, like our ancestors, we risked being cursed if we didn't believe in the power and reality of the wisdom.

Among the nature lore was the magic of dew, believed to be a powerful remedy and charm. How else could so mysterious a property, appearing on clear, dry nights but vanishing by morning, be explained but by magic? Washing with dew during the fertile month of May would bring good luck during the coming year.

Good luck came, too, to those who wished for it at the first sight of a rainbow, though it was considered bad luck to point at the rainbow. At the rainbow's end there was a pot of gold, if only that elusive end could be reached.

The night sky, the realm of the gods, was a never-ending source of folklore. For children, wishing on a star, either the first star of the evening or a shooting star, would bring fulfillment of that wish. Native Americans believed the silver swath of the Milky Way to be the soul-road and the brightest stars in the sky the campfires where souls rested in their travels.

Farmers said that if the stars were larger and brighter than usual, a storm was on the way. Their animals knew it, too. Pigs would gather leaves and straw. Dogs would eat grass. Cows would lay down, refusing to go to pasture. Birds flew low and silently.

'Punxsutawney Phil'

Surely one of the more familiar of the folk legends is the tale of "Punxsutawney Phil", the lovable groundhog who, since 1886, has been the center of attention every Feb. 2, in Pennsylvania. Around New England, groundhogs are better known as woodchucks and their voracious appetite and indiscriminate eating have made them the nemesis of gardeners. True hibernators, they are the largest member of the squirrel family, short-legged and chunky in build, measuring up to 30 inches long. To naturalists, the woodchuck is known as an "edge" specialist, a master digger who fashions a deep, long and extensive - up to 45 feet - den with multiple entrances in fields and forest edges.

Coaxed out of his burrow by the town fathers of Punxsutawney, Pa., all eyes are on Phil as the prognosticator of the weather. The tradition of using a hibernator to predict the weather actually dates back to 16th century Germany where badgers and hedgehogs were used as forecasters. But, when German farmers arrived in Pennsylvania and could find no badgers or hedgehogs for the job, they substituted groundhogs. The folklore says that if the day is cloudy and the groundhog does not see his shadow, spring will arrive early. If, however, he does see his shadow and is frightened back into his den, spring is six weeks away. In truth, if left undisturbed by television crews and publicity-seeking elected officials, Phil and his brethren and sistern are happy to sleep away the month of February, emerging much later in the winter during the first warm-up.

Here in New England, our seafaring tradition has made "Red sky at night, sailors' delight; Red sky in the morn, sailors take warn" another familiar adage (country folk substituted shepherd for sailor), but one that holds true only if the red sky at night is in the east. Because weather travels from west to east, a red sky at night in the east means that clouds and rain have already passed and that fair weather is on the way. A red sky at night in the west, however, could mean that stormy weather is approaching.

Growing up summers in Provincetown, where keeping an eye on the sky became second nature, I often heard the red sky wisdom, though it was another bit of folklore - about razor clams, what we called jack-knife clams - that made an even more lasting impression. The harbor sand flats, then, were littered with shells from all sorts of clams - quahogs, steamers, scallops and razors - and we spent many an hour digging for the buried bounty. The razor clam, though, always eluded us. An old fisherman, watching us dig one afternoon, explained that razor clams can "feel" the vibration of approaching footsteps and pull themselves down deep in the sand, out of reach. "You have to sneak up on them," he told me, "and grab them in the first scoop." I remember thinking it absurd that a clam could outsmart a person, but I have retold the tale on many occasions, as much for its charm as for the excuse it gives me for never having unearthed a live razor clam.

With winter settling in around us, it will be fun to see just how much of the seasonal folklore proves true. Said to be among the harbingers of a hard winter are a warm November, November blooming flowers and leaves that fall late. A green Christmas, goes the saying, a white Easter. Folks with wood stoves and fireplaces can listen for "popping" wood and watch for their cats to sit with their backs to the fire, signs that the snow will soon fall. Prolific nut and berry crops - I can personally attest to a bumper crop of wild blueberries and raspberries, beach plums, grapes and acorns this season - are also a portent of a harsh winter, as is a first snow falling on frozen ground. Bees' nests built high in trees are said to be another predictor of a long, harsh winter. Last summer was a particularly bountiful year for bald-faced hornets whose complex, football-shaped "paper" nests, made from chewed wood and leaves, can now be seen all over town hanging from bare tree branches.

Here in my backyard the bushy-tailed squirrels are frantically foraging, carrying away piles of acorns and corn kernels, though I can't tell if their behavior is any more frantic than it has been in years past. But, what is unusual is the number of cheerful tufted titmice, mixing happily with chickadees, woodpeckers and nuthatches at the feeders. We've always had these adorable little birds with the pointed crest and beady black eyes, but never in such numbers. I have to wonder if maybe they, too, are a sign of something to come.

AHANA is PC

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

If the Boston City Council had its way, there would be no more minorities.

At worst, we may have to learn a new word, made-up word — AHANA.

The Council last week voted unanimously (12-0) to ban the word "minority" from all official city documents.

"The term is anachronistic and demeaning," said Council President Charles Yancey, a minority himself. "The city of Boston is in a great position to exercise some leadership as to the meaning of this word . . . which very clearly means 'less than.'"

Great! So now the government writes the dictionary for us.

But don't laugh — at least, not yet. The city of San Diego has banned the word "minority" since last spring, and California has not yet slid off into the ocean, although there are people who still hold out hope.

"To have that term really made me feel inferior," Robert Ito, a fourth generation Japanese-American, told the San Diego Council. Fourth generation and he's still a Japanese-American? When does he become an unhyphenated American?

"When you see all people as children of God, you then see all people as your brothers and sisters," said San Diego Mayor Dick Murphy as he signed the measure into law.

Fortunately for Boston, Mayor Tom Menino suffered an attack of lucidity that lasted long enough for him to veto the measure before it got out of hand and the city adopted the acronym AHANA to describe Yancey and those like him.

AHANA stands for "African, Hispanic, Asian, and Native Americans."

AHANA stands for "African, Hispanic, Asian, and Native Americans" and, believe it or not, already is used by Boston College to file its minority students in politically correct pigeon holes.

"I would argue that using the word AHANA has drawn students closer to the office. It speaks about cultural diversity," Donald Brown, director of BC's AHANA office, was quoted as saying.

Instead of going all out for AHANA, Yancey proposed that the phrase "people of color" replace minorities in city documents, even though I know a large number of Hispanics who could pass for Swedes if northern Europeans ever became fashionable again.

"People of color" may be a misnomer for minorities, too, because women, who are actually a majority, have been considered a minority ever since it was discovered that they differed from men and had to be protected under the affirmative action umbrella.

Use of the words "people of color" has always baffled me, too, since I can recall a time when African-Americans were known as "colored people," a term that was consigned to the scrap heap in favor of "blacks" and then "African-Americans," etc.

Tell me, what is the difference between "colored people" and "people of color?" And has anyone told the folks at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that their name is now politically incorrect?

Herbert Gans, a sociologist who views the contretemps from an ivory tower at Columbia University in New York, thinks the whole thing is a step backward.

"People of color is sort of racist because it says that all we care about is the color of people's skin," he said.

Algae blooms aren't pretty

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Every new year, Dennis and Doris McNulty, whose house is on upper little Harbor (above Cat Dam at the north end of Nichols Road), make a request of the town to open Cat Dam using a schedule they have developed. The purpose of this regular opening of the dam between the upper and lower harbor is to reduce the probability of an algae bloom in the spring.

Predicting the timing and severity of an algae bloom is clearly an inexact process.

Over the years, studies have concluded, and experience has found, that if the dam is opened once a month at spring tides (the highest tides of the month, coinciding with the full moon) and kept open during the months of January and February, the chance of an algae bloom in June is considerably reduced.

Sometimes, it is also necessary to open the dam during the onset of a bloom. Predicting the timing and severity of an algae bloom is clearly an inexact process. It depends on the amount and severity of rainfall, how much open land has been covered by additional building; what lawn care procedure abutters use on their lawns, and how they dispose of debris and brush plus a host of other factors.

Over the last few years, the algae has been especially difficult to control so the McNultys have taken to requesting the Board of Health to include with their schedule of Dam openings, reminders about the things property owners around upper Little Harbor can do to reduce the probability of a spring algae bloom. If you live around Little Harbor, you can look for such a letter from your neighbor toward the end of February or in March. Meanwhile, Here's the schedule for this year's Cat Dam openings:

Cat Dam will be opened between Jan. 7 and March 18; also on the following dates:

April 24, 25, 26	Wednesday,	Thursday, Friday
May 27, 28, 29	Monday,	Tuesday, Wednesday
June 26, 27, 28	Wednesday,	Thursday, Friday
July 22, 23, 24	Monday,	Tuesday, Wednesday
Aug. 13, 14, 15	Tuesday,	Wednesday, Thursday
Sept. 9, 10, 11	Monday,	Tuesday, Wednesday
Oct. 7, 8, 9	Monday,	Tuesday, Wednesday
Nov. 4, 5, 6	Monday,	Tuesday, Wednesday
Dec. 2, 3, 4	Monday,	Tuesday, Wednesday

Cultural grant supports art center

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, state Rep. Garrett J. Bradley and Diane M. Kennedy, chairwoman of the Cohasset Cultural Council, announced a $3,300 has been awarded to the South Shore Art Center by the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

Hedlund said the grants are an essential resource for the arts.

"Programs like the South Shore Art Center, which are supported by the Massachusetts Cultural Council, play an important role in our community," said Hedlund, R-Weymouth. "Programs like these are an essential resource to a community's quality of life and economic prosperity. Public support ensures cultural and educational opportunities provided by these programs are available for everyone."

Bradley said the programs, which the grants help pay for, are vital to the communities.

"I am very proud of the organizations here who have submitted successful proposals to the Mass. Cultural Council," said Bradley, D-Hingham. "In times like these, when arts and culture are invoked to commemorate celebrations as well as sadness, we must remember how vitally important they are to our communities. We should all take great pride in the fact that cities and towns in this region and throughout Massachusetts have vibrant cultural organizations of all sizes."

The grant is funded by the council's Organizational Support Program, which provides multi-year operating support for public programs in the arts, sciences and humanities administered by local cultural organizations and schools that have excelled in serving the public.

Studies prove that in-depth participation in cultural programs by schoolchildren enhances cognitive and work skills, builds creative and critical thinking skills, reduces truancy and dropout rates and encourages self-esteem. In turn, not-for-profit cultural organizations have an enormous economic impact in Massachusetts, providing more than 40,000 jobs, attracting tourists and leveraging other public and private dollars to improve the state's quality of life. For more information about the Mass. Cultural Council programs, call 800-232-0960

Memorial Library preschool story hour

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is now accepting registration for the Winter Preschool Story Hour. Children between the ages of three and five are welcome to participate. The program will consist of six sessions and will begin Jan. 28, and end March 4. A Thursday morning session from 10 to11 a.m. will be offered. You may register by calling the library 781-383-1348 or by signing up in person. Space is limited to 15 participants. Children currently on the Fall Story Hour waiting list are considered registered and will receive a telephone confirmation.

icant increase in the DOE budget proposed by the governor next year, there wouldn't be enough money to do "what we want to do" including providing towns relief with high special education costs. So the DOE cannot put an additional $30 million toward new school construction grants, he said.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, explained the DOE makes the first payment on school projects the year after the grant award is made. So the $52 million approved by the legislature for the SBA line item in fiscal year 2002 actually pays for FY01 grant awards. So it isn't as if, the DOE is diverting SBA money to special education or other programs, he said.

Hedlund said this would be a major issue in the budget debate in the spring. He expects bipartisan support to get funding closer to the $50 million if not the full $52 million.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who worked with Hedlund to get the matter on the DOE's Jan. 22 agenda, said there should be full and fair debate on the matter and how this affects the communities.

"This is an inappropriate way of cutting money from the budget," he said. "The towns started project borrowing based on a given window."

Haddad said the delay in reimbursement could jeopardize other town projects and financial needs. Operating budget overrides are routinely required in Cohasset every third year or so — but with homeowners saddled with hundreds of dollars in extra taxes for the school buildings — they may not be open to raising their taxes any higher.

Haddad and school building committee chairman Rob Spofford told Town Meeting at the time the projects were proposed, the town could expect reimbursement in five years.

"It's been their history, that's the point," Haddad said. "You can't throw $50 million a year at something then all of a sudden cut it in half. You just don't do that with certain services."

ZBA to take center stage

cern at a recent meeting that there's considerable misinformation being floated around town about what the town can and cannot do regarding Avalon's application for a comprehensive permit. The comprehensive permit allows a developer to skirt most local zoning laws in exchange for providing a percentage of affordable housing — something which Cohasset has precious little of.

The project is not a "done deal" because the Zoning Board can set conditions as long as they don't hurt the economic viability of the project and the board also has the authority to deny the comprehensive permit. Avalon can appeal a denial to the state although the state expects a fairly rigorous process at the local level, the ZBA said.

Chairman Woody Chittick expects a crowd at the early negotiations, which must start within 30 days of Avalon's filing for a comprehensive permit, because so many town boards and town officials are interested in the project.

The ZBA will invite Hucksan to its Jan. 24 meeting to provide a short refresher on the law, which has undergone some changes at the state level. Last winter, the ZBA attended what members describe as "40-B boot camp," a workshop on the complex law. The board will also appear before selectmen Jan. 15 to discuss the comprehensive permit process. Interested citizens are encouraged to attend.

Plans are to conduct the AvalonBay hearings in the selectmen's office which has better acoustics than the Town Hall auditorium and the room can accommodate about 30 people.

Cohasset census for 2002 mailed

The Town Census for 2002 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency, which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain veterans' benefits, and reduced tuition rates at state colleges and universities.

Dog forms are on a tear off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible although you may have recently renewed your 2001 license. If you did not receive your census, contact the Town Clerk's office.

Harbor Walk public workshop

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is hosting a public workshop on proposed Harbor infrastructure and streetscape improvements on Thursday, Jan. 17 at 7:30 p.m. at the Saint Anthony's Parish Center. The Cecil Group, and urban landscape architectural firm, will present ideas to improve pedestrian and bicycle accessibility and the linkages between public access points around the waterfront. Discussion items will include sidewalk and railing designs; defined parking lanes; pedestrian scale lighting; and the possible inclusion of designated bike lanes. For additional information contact the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation office located at 87 Elm St., 781-383-2449.

Positions filled

Selectmen appointed Charles and Michelle Furtado, 63 Highland Ave., to the Common Historic District Commission this week. Chairman of the Commission, Jacqueline Clarke, approved of the appointments, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Harbor group forms

The "Friends of Cohasset Harbor," a group of citizens concerned about the development around the harbor and promoting managed growth urge all citizens to attend the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation workshop on proposed harbor infrastructure and streetscape improvements on Thursday, Jan. 17 at 7:30 p.m. at the Saint Anthony's Parish Center.

The group is particularly concerned about public access, the impact of traffic and congestion, commercial uses with less than adequate required off-street parking, which leaves fewer spaces for Cohasset residents, noise and excessive illumination. The Friends support appropriate development such as the rehabilitation of the Mill River Marine, provided it can be done on a reasonable scale and within the bounds of existing environmental and zoning bylaws.

Selectmen sour on sewer plant

Selectmen lambasted the Sewer Commission at their meeting this week saying the commission needed to make aesthetic improvements to its Elm Street plant. At the Selectmen's last meeting in December, the Sewer Commission said it would need close to $450,000 to redo all the buildings.

"That's ridiculous," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris. "They were just throwing around high numbers to put people off to the idea."

Selectman Tom Callahan said encapsulating the current plant with a large building makes no sense.

"Constructing a building around another one is asinine," he said. "That would just create a bigger eyesore."

Some felt the problem was with the town's consultants, Tutela Engineering Associates.

"Tutela should not be involved with this project," Selectman Michael Sullivan said. "We should hire a separate contractor."

Concerned residents met Wednesday to discuss their options, after the Mariner went to press Selectmen will set a time at a later date to hear their recommendations.

Health screening Jan. 23 at St. Anthony's

A community health screening will be held Wednesday, Jan. 23, at St. Anthony's Catholic Church, 129 Main Street.

Life Line Screening will offer three primary health screenings to detect the risk of stroke and vascular disease. These tests include a Carotid Artery Screening Test, an Abdominal Aortic Aneurysm (AAA) test, and an ankle Brachial Index (ABI).

Also on that day, Life Line Screening will offer a bone density screening for women which tests for the early detection of osteoporosis.

These fast, painless, and low cost tests are conducted by a registered or registered eligible Ultrasound Technologists. A board-certified physician reviews the results of each test to ensure accuracy of the results before the findings are mailed to each individual.

All participants will receive money saving coupons and free information on the identification and control of risk factors, how to recognize the warning signs and symptoms of stroke and other vascular diseases as well as helpful information regarding osteoporosis.

Anyone interested must register at least 24 hours in advance. Call 1-800-407-4557 to schedule an appointment for tests. The tests are offered for $40 ($35 for osteoporosis test).

Science Center opens first EcoZone exhibit

By Gregory Mathis
GMATHIS@CNC.COM

They were going wild at the South Shore Natural Science Center Tuesday night. Not only because Jeff Corwin was in the house, but also for the unveiling of the first phase of its state-of-the-art interactive ecology exhibit.

Corwin, the Norwell native and host of Animal Planet's "The Jeff Corwin Experience", took a break from his busy schedule to join the "Tossing of the Turtles" party at the Science Center as the first phase of the EcoZone project was revealed during a private party Tuesday.

"This is a reminder of the magic you find in your own backyard," Corwin told those in attendance before the official ribbon-cutting. "It's for our children and our families to wallow in and to remind us of what this area has to offer and what it's all about."

The EcoZone features live turtle and frog ponds, surrounded by grasses, ferns and swamp azalea, with high glass walls for visitors to view the animals; a life-sized model of a red maple tree that houses several mounted animals and nests; and a hollow log large enough for both children and adults to crawl through, allowing them to see turtles and frogs through peep holes and hear pond noises.

Corwin said the goal of the EcoZone is to make magic and compete with any natural science museum in the country, no matter what size.

"It's about getting people excited about their backyard, not because it's their backyard, but because it's something to get excited about," Corwin said.

Corwin, who now lives in Marshfield, approached those in charge at the South Shore Natural Science Center in early spring of 1999 with a vision of an interactive, multidimensional exhibit focusing on the eco-systems of southeastern Massachusetts.

"This was purely Jeff's vision," said Martha Twigg, executive director of the center.

And the first phase of his vision was well received by those in attendance Tuesday, especially the children.

Spencer Parsons greeted Corwin upon his arrival at the Science Center Tuesday night and presented the local celebrity with an EcoZone T-shirt to autograph. Spencer, as well as brothers Cameron and Colby Parsons, have been big fans of Corwin for a long time and had even taken part in a summer reading fundraiser at the Science Center "Pages for Peepers."

Geoff Gordon, 13, of Scituate, said his mother worked at the Science Center and he's seen the transformation of the EcoZone over the past several months.

Jeff Corwin, of Animal Planet's "The Jeff Corwin Experience" fame, cuts the ceremonial ribbon for the first phase of the EcoZone during a private party for contributors at the South Shore Natural Science Center Tuesday night.

"I've seen it being built for awhile, my mom works here" Geoff said. "It hasn't looked great until tonight."

Ethan Niyangoda, 4, of Weymouth, was the lucky winner of the raffle prize, which won him an invitation to the party and a chance to meet Corwin.

Ethan's mother, Cheryl, said he was a huge fan of Corwin's and couldn't wait to meet him. "He watches the show all the time," Cheryl said.

Niyangoda, who lives in Weymouth, said her family has been a member at the Science Center since moving to the area 2 1/2 years ago.

"This is such a great place," she said, noting Evan attended the summer camp program at the Science Center this summer.

After Corwin cut the ceremonial ribbon and released several turtles into their new habitat, the children went wild crawling through the hollow log to see the turtles and frogs through the peep holes.

"I can't believe how much the kids are enjoying it," said Joan Reid, publicity coordinator at the Science Center. "It's so great."

The invitation-only celebration was a "thank you" party, said Twigg, for those who have contributed significantly to the EcoZone project since its conception in 1999.

The first phase of the EcoZone project and the preliminary design for the rest of the exhibit cost $150,000. The Science Center is looking to raise an additional $400,000 for the second phase and to set money aside for maintenance of the facility.

Scott Butterfield, a member of the board of directors at the Science Center, said he hopes Tuesday's event accelerates the fundraising efforts. He even shared a personal story about the types of contributions the project is receiving.

"I told my son it was time to pay up," Butterfield said. "He got his piggybank and said you can take the pennies but you can't take the dollars."

Butterfield said with all that's happened in the world since Sept. 11, it was important not only to focus on our families, but also our environment.

Depending on how quickly additional funds are raised, Science Center officials are hoping to have the exhibit completed within 18 months.

The first phase of the exhibit opens to the public on Monday, Jan. 14.

The South Shore Natural Science Center is located on Jacob's Lane in Norwell. For more information call (781) 659-2559.

GIMME SHELTER

Fluffy

Moe

Curly

The Hull Seaside Animal Rescue is looking for a few good homes! This week, there are three beautiful young cats in need of adoption.

Fluffy is a long hair tiger female, who lives up to her name! She is less than one-year-old, spayed and has received all her shots. Fluffy is gentle and cuddly and would do well in a home with older children. She is very attached to Curly and it would be ideal to find them a home together.

Curly is a male, compact version of fluffy. He's a little on the shy side, but very sweet and probably about 6-8 months old. He has been neutered, tested and vaccinated, and would like to be placed with Fluffy, if possible.

Moe is a handsome male black short hair, about one-year-old. He is shy, but has quite the personality and would do well in a one or two adult household with no other pets or children.

If you would like to meet one of these cats, please contact Hull Seaside Animal Rescue - 781-925-8584 or email: seaside8584@aol.com.

Register for SS Community Nursery School

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School announces nursery school applications for the 2002-2003 school year will become available on Tuesday, Jan. 22 at the Nursery School and Community Center offices.

Nursery School registration is based on a lottery system. Applications will be available Jan. 22 - 29.

Completed applications must be returned to the South Shore Community Center office by Wednesday, Jan. 30. Application envelopes should be marked nursery school registration application.

Parents registering their child in the 3-year-old program should enclose a copy of the child's birth certificate to ensure proper placement of students in the program. All applications must include the $90 registration fee. Family membership for the school year is included in the fee. There is no financial commitment for children who are placed on the waiting list; checks will be returned.

The lottery will be drawn the week of Feb. 4. Nursery School acceptance letters will be sent via the mail the following week.

The school offers three levels of programs to meet the needs of 3 to 5-year-olds. Programs run from 9 - 11:30 a.m. and 12:30 -3 p.m. Some extended before and after school programs will be available.

The nursery program is for children who will be three years of age by Oct. 20. The pre-kindergarten program is for children who are, or will be 4 years old by Oct. 20, 2002. The four day and five day enrichment programs are offered to older 4-year-olds and 5-year-olds who have attended a pre-kindergarten program but are ineligible for kindergarten, or would benefit from an enrichment year.

Please direct questions regarding placement to the director, Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036. Parent observation welcome.

Stars of the Week

Jon Littauer

The Cohasset High freshman opened a lot of eyes wrestling at 103 pounds at this past weekend's Whitman-Hanson Invitational Tournament, finishing third in the strong 10 wrestler field. This marks the second 3rd place finish for Littauer at a major tourney in a week, the other strong showing coming at Marshfield's Holiday Tourney on Dec. 27 and 28.

Cohasset-Norwell girls vault ahead

Gymnastics squad squeaks by Hanover to go to 3-0

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Hanover High gymnastics coach Alesha Delgiacco knew her girls would have to come up with a supreme effort to keep Cohasset-Norwell from winning its third meet in as many tries. The Lady Indians didn't have enough steam to defeat C-N, but the young Hanover team did put a pretty good scare into Kara Connerty's squad. And C-N showed some resolve by overcoming eight falls on the balance beam before surging through the floor exercise to pull out a 124.9–119.1 win at Cohasset. C-N raised its record to 3-0 while Hanover fell to 1-1 after defeating Hingham in its opening meet.

Delgiacco, a transplanted North Carolinian via Pennsylvania, worked the numbers prior to the meet and figured Hanover would have a tough time downing C-N.

"We knew we'd have to make up about five points to beat them," she said. "They're a very good team but I'm thrilled with our performance.

"We knew Cohasset-Norwell would be our toughest competition."

C-N swept the top-two all-around spots as Kristin Sheerin's 8.9 scores on the vault and floor paced her to a 34.3 with Meredith Bixby second with a 31.5. Hanover freshman Molly Fanning was third at 30.7 and Julianne Sullivan's 29.6 was good for fourth.

Hanover was well within striking

Green Wave scuttles Skippers

Slow start costs hoopsters in Abington showdown

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Against one of the top teams they will play this season, the Cohasset basketball Skippers played arguably their best game of the year Tuesday.

Although Abington did get the better of its hosts, 57-45, Cohasset High coach Ron Ford could not have been more pleased with how his team performed.

"I am extremely proud of the way we played tonight," said the 11th year head coach. "We were solid."

Senior Tom McSharry led the Green Wave with 20 points, connecting on pull-up jumpers and smooth moves in the paint.

Senior captain Pete Maitland led the Skippers in scoring with 13 points, making five or his last six field goal attempts to help close the gap late in the game.

Wrestlers turn it around at W-H tourney

Jon Littauer does team, family proud with second place finish

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After the Cohasset wrestling squad lost standout captain Dan Littauer to a dislocated elbow in the pre-season, the young squad got off to a rocky start. Coming off a strong performance at the Whitman-Hanson Tournament this past Saturday, veteran coach Torin Sweeney believes his team can turn things around.

Their record now standing at 3-7, the C.H.S. grapplers have lost five matches that have come down to the final bout. And though their record could easily be 7-3, the low team morale showed through in a lackluster performance at the Marshfield Tournament over the Christmas holiday.

"We wrestled very poorly," said Sweeney of his team's showing in Marshfield. "I was disappointed as a coach."

Getting back in the flow

Saturday's cancellation extends hockey team's layoff to 18 days

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A long layoff for the Cohasset High hockey team became a little longer, as a cooling tower breakdown at Hingham's Pilgrim Arena forced the cancellation of Saturday's scheduled South Shore League tilt with Harwich.

This pushed the Skippers removal from real game action from 14 to 18 days. The C.H.S. skaters last played on Dec. 22, taking the entire Christmas school vacation off, and were now not scheduled to play next until last night against SSL rival Mashpee, a first year varsity program.

This matchup is not likely to present the 4-0 Skippers with much of an opportunity to scrape off the rust before their much anticipated showdown with Norwell on Saturday at Pilgrim (7:20 start).

"The long time between games does concern me a little bit, but I think we'll be alright," offered veteran Cohasset coach Dennis

Record turnout for alumni hockey games

By Jo-Ann Pilczak
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

If there is ice, they will come to skate:... and come to skate they did. They came from Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire and New York to skate. A record number of alumni varsity ice hockey skaters — 39 in all — played in the Third Annual Varsity Ice Hockey Alumni Games, representing CHS graduation classes from 1972 through 2001. The games were held last Sunday from 12:20 to 2:30 at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham, the Skippers' home rink.

Game #1 was a face-off between alumni skaters representing graduating classes 1972 to 1986 and this year's Junior Varsity team. Freshman goalie Brendan Michaud was in net for the Junior Varsity team while Alumni goalie Jeremy Williams protected the Alumni net. The Alumni team left the ice as the victors with a 6-1 win over the Junior Varsity.

Alumni skaters from 1987 to the most recent graduates of 2001 faced-off in the second game. With senior Dan Kinchla in net for the Varsity team, this exciting game had the Varsity team in a comfortable lead into the third period when the Alumni skaters turned on the heat. The game ended in a 9-9 tie. Jeremy Williams covered the net for the Alumni team in his second game of the day.

In addition to good-spirited camaraderie, nostalgia was ever present as old team members stepped on the ice together. Jack Dean: ('72), Craig Seeley ('72) and Will White ('73) enjoyed the opportunity to once again skate on the same line during the first game. The largest group of alumni, from the '80s when the team was particularly strong, accounted from more than half the Alumni players on the ice.

This year also presented an opportunity for family members to play one another. John Durkin ('78) was on the ice opposite his son, junior forward John Durkin. Brothers Jay Rasmussen ('01) and sophomore forward Mike Rasmussen played against one another as did Matt Pilczak ('00) and freshman defenseman Tim Pilczak. Senior goalie Dan Kinchla found himself defending the net against his older brother John ('93). Brothers Mike ('93) and Pat ('96) Reynolds were together again on the ice as Alumni players in the second game.

Head Varsity Coach Dennis Walsh was present to greet the Alumni skaters, but had to leave before the games began for the christening of a new grandchild.

Referees for the game were Chuck Peterson and Bill Devine, father of sophomore defenseman Mike Devine. Varsity Assistant Coaches Benjamin Watson and Peter Sandblom (who is also the Head Coach for the Junior Varsity team) coached the bench for the Varsity and Junior Varsity teams. For the second game, Sandblom left the role of coach to join his former 1988 teammates as an Alumni skater.

For the third year in a row, one member of the Alumni skaters who prefers to remain anonymous generously offered to pay the game registration fee for any Alumni skater who is currently a college student. This was only one gesture of the brotherhood these former Varsity skaters feel for one another.

To add to the afternoon's excitement, Alumni player John Durkin ('78) donated four tickets to the Jan. 21 Bruins vs St. Louis Blues hockey game to be raffled off during the afternoon. The lucky winner — referee Bill Devine — and his family will be sitting in these great seats on the red line for this exciting game.

As players left the rink — many wearing the "2002 Alumni Game" souvenir shirt given to all the players and coaches — the departing words most frequently heard were ... "see you at next year's game!" If there is ice ... they will come to skate.

distance of C-N after two events, 62-59.9, heading into the beam. Sheerin and Bixby went 1-2 on the bars, but Fanning (8.1) and Keri Gerrish (8.0) went 2-3 on the vault behind Sheerin.

It was Bixby's solid 8.1 behind Sheerin's 8.4 that proved to be the key performance. C-N bested Hanover on the beam then took the floor with Sheerin and Bixby leading the way with scores of 8.9 and 8.2, respectively. Sullivan was third with an 8.1 and C-N's Jenn Guiney also broke into the 8s with her 8.0 for fourth.

"It was a little nerve-racking after bars and vault when they were so close," said Bixby, who equaled her best score of the season on the beam. "I usually get stronger as the meet goes on."

Connerty knows that C-N will live or die by the beam all season. Sheerin and Bixby will only be able to carry the team so far and they'll only be able to carry the slack of eight falls for so long.

"We had a really difficult time on the beam tonight," she said. "We need to be more consistent. It doesn't matter if you're the better team. Anything can happen on any given night."

Connerty believes the three meets next week will be a good change of pace for the girls, who have competed just three times since the season started in late November.

"We're all really looking forward to it."

Pee Wee A squad starting to heat up

COASTAL STARS REPORT

For the Coastal Stars Pee Wee A team it looked as though it would be a long Christmas week. With back-to-back games on the weekend before Christmas and four games in Pilgrim Arena's "Santa Claus" tournament, it looked as though the Coastal Star's elite Pee Wees might have a little holiday blues to go along with their Christmas cheer.

The Stars entered the first contest of their hockey packed holiday week on Dec. 22 in a matinee match against a statistically better Braintree A team in Asiaf rink in Brockton. Star's coach Rich Ohlund, a former Marshfield High School superstar, never gave up on his team despite their winless record. The source of his confidence was an awareness that his team was in every game, with most of their losses coming by only a goal or two. Hoping to pass his confidence on to his players, Coach Ohlund implored his team to play harder and persevere.

Ohlund and his assistants, Leo McDonald and Rich Shea, continued to prepare the team well in practice and demanded that if they wanted a chance to win their players couldn't just play well in spurts, but had to be consistent throughout the whole game.

The Braintree game started with Braintree jumping out to an early 1-0 lead and the Stars in an all too familiar position of being down and having to battle back. The Braintree lead did not last long as Coach Ohlund's son, Richie, buried a nifty pass from line mate and high scoring forward P.J.Martina.

After battling back and forth for the rest of the first period Star forward Justin McDonald sped down his wing and found line mate Richie Shea perched in the slot who slammed home his pass for the game's go ahead goal.

As the second period got underway Stars forward Craig Nicohols, whose fine game and determined effort was not reflected on the scoring ledger, got on the board by setting up line mate, Shea, to put the stars in the unfamiliar position of being up by two goals. The Stars' comfortable lead would not last long as Braintree came roaring back with a goal that beat the otherwise dependable goalie Dan Wehlan pulling them within one.

Once again it was Shea who would answer for the Stars. This time Shea went in unassisted and beat the Braintree goalie completing his hat trick and putting the Stars up by two once again.

The dogged Braintree attack never abated and through hard work and aggressive play they pulled within one early in the third.

With the score 4-3 midway through the third, the Stars were looking for something that would change their bad fortune. What they found was a determined skillful spark plug of a player, Cody Morgan, who they had just called up from the Pee Wee B team. Morgan playing smart positional hockey put himself in position to bang home a rebound from a Justin McDonald blast to put the Stars up by two for the third and final time.

With the seasons first victory under their belt, the Stars were eager to play their next match the following day against always dangerous Cape Cod Canal Pee Wee A team. The Stars fell behind early but pulled even on a Justin McDonald unassisted gem.

The second period was a defensive stand off as there were no goals and just a handful of offensive opportunities. Coach Ohlund's praise of his team's defensive play was effusive highlighting specifically the superb play of defensemen Patrick Kennedy, Mike Kerrigan, Conor Holoway, and Mike Parsons. Holoway and Kerrigan were steady unflinching guardians of their goalie and protected the puck in their own zone. Kennedy and Kerrigan's ability to move the puck out of their own zone to start offensive rushes contributed greatly to the offensive flurries the Stars were able to muster.

The Stars scored twice in the third on goals by Nicohols and Kerrigan to take a 3-1 victory into their tournament play during Christmas week.

What looked to be a week of holiday blues turned into a week of triumphs and celebration for the hard fighting Pee Wee A team. Using their two regular season victories as the catalyst the Stars notched two more victories in the Santa Claus tournament in Hingham.

Coach Ohlund and his staff recognizing the importance of momentum felt confident that these victories would give the team the confidence they need as they start a new year and the second half of the season.

Despite a superb job of defending done by Cohasset's Ben Lynner (21) on SSL top scorer James Smith (green shirt), Tuesday night, the Skippers couldn't recover from a slow start against Abington.

Junior power forward Ben Lynner tallied 12 points to go with nine rebounds, scoring eight of his points from the foul line. Lynner also did a tremendous job defending one of the league's best players, senior James Smith.

Smith, a South Shore League All-Star starter a year ago and the league's leading scorer heading into the game at 22.3 per tilt, was held without a three-pointer for the first time this season. The team defense for Cohasset was also tremendous, holding a sharpshooting squad to under 60 points.

"If someone had told me before the game that we would hold them to 57 points," began Ford, "then I would have thought we would win the game."

Abington showed its speed and ability to press early on, snatching up a10-0 lead before Ford could call a time-out. After that, the teams played almost dead even.

With a 33-19 halftime lead, Cohasset could not do much more than trade bucket for bucket with the visitors, and the closest they got the rest of the way was nine points with 2:35 left (51-42).

Ford classified Abington as one of the elite Div. 3 teams, along with schools such as Carver, Norwell, Scituate and Rockland. They are again one of the favorites to win the South Shore League after finishing last year with the number 6 seed in the state tourney sectionals.

Abington has had Cohasset's number this millennium with a 4-0 record. The Green Wave handed the Skippers three of their eight losses last year, including the loss that knocked them out of the state tourney.

The Skippers now stand at 3-5 after losses to Abington and Norton (Friday night). Ford has made it clear that his main objective is to get back up to sea level, and maintain .500 ball until the Div. 4 post-season rolls around.

Game Notes

-Abington shot 90% as a team from the foul line.

-Between the last two Abington-Cohasset meetings, Green Wave sniper Mike Carey has made 10 field goals, all of them threes.

-Within the final 35 seconds of the game, Cohasset junior Ian Kidder recorded at least one tally in four different statistical categories: rebounds, blocks, steals, and assists.

the only Skipper to place in that tournament, taking third place at 103 pounds.

Sweeney decided to hold a team meeting to tell his team that "we would not go through the season like that."

After four very demanding practices, the team showed their preparedness, taking sixth place in the very difficult Whitman-Hanson field.

"At Whitman-Hanson, there was a higher intensity," the nineteenth year coach said. "It was just a better overall effort."

Again, Littauer took third, solidifying his place as one of the top lightweight wrestlers in the area. The little brother of Dan, Jon admitted that he has some big shoes to fill.

"Now that my brother is gone, I feel more pressure from my family," confessed the frosh. "But we have stepped up the practices, and I feel [the team] will do really well."

Junior Terry Baroudi, named a captain because of his leadership and extensive tournament experience, placed second at 135 pounds at W-H.

Converted basketball player Cosimo Cambi, a junior in his first year wrestling, also finished fourth at 189.

Sophomore Chris McKenna did not place, but had one of the day's highlights in knocking off the number two seed at 145 pounds before being eliminated.

Although the Skippers may have liked to finish higher, they can take some pride that four of the five teams finishing ahead of them (Weymouth, Duxbury, Whitman-Hanson, and BC High) are Div. 1 powers.

"We turned it up a notch, and they responded," lauded Sweeney, who believes that he can regroup his team for the second half of the year.

Something Skipper fans can look forward to is Dan Littauer possibly returning to do some light drilling. Although he has not received a doctor's clearance yet, Sweeney seems excited about the prospect of having his leader back.

Getting back in the flow

Walsh. "We've had some good practices over the last four weeks, and we've got four lines skating hard and competing for ice time. That helps keep the boys motivated."

Walsh, who is minding the Skippers bench for his 30th and final season, also feels his team's re-imbuing will be aided by the Alumni game it played in this past Sunday, with several still-active college age players returning to take part in the "friendly exhibition."

"The kids were pushed in that game," reported Walsh. "There was a good level of competition. Obviously, the scheduling of the game turned out to be a big plus for us."

The Harwich game is expected to be made up in early February.

SPORTS NOTES

Lifeguards wanted!

It's not too soon to be thinking about a summer time job!

If you enjoy swimming and working with children, become a certified Water Safety Instructor. Winter courses are being offered starting Jan. 20, running on Sundays, 9a.m. to 5 p.m., and also during the school break, Feb. 18-22, 9a.m. to 5p.m.. Water Safety Instructor applicants must be 17 years old.

Any questions should be directed to Sue Mavilia at 781-383-1988.

Cohasset High coaching vacancies

For the spring, 2002 seasons, Cohasset High is seeking a girls lacrosse coach and the Cohasset Middle School is seeking a softball coach. Interested individuals should call Athletic Director Ron Ford at 781-383- 6103.

Cohasset Youth Lax looking for coaches

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program is looking for volunteer assistant coaches at all levels for its spring season.

In all, seven Cohasset teams are expected to play in 2002, including boys teams at the 14 & Under, 12 & Under and 10 & Under levels, with two teams each at the youngest levels. For the first time, the program also will field girls teams, with one each in the 14 & Under and 12 & Under level.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse currently has head coaches at all age levels, but with so many teams and the possibility of nearly 200 children spread throughout, increasing the coaching staffs and enabling the players to get more personalized instruction.

Through its seven-year history, the foundation of the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse coaching staff has been volunteers who do not have children on the teams involved. In seeking additional coaches, the program is hoping to get both community volunteers and parents whose children will play. Experience playing or coaching the game is desired, but not necessary. Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will pay registration costs to coaching clinics for those individuals interested in participating.

At most levels, Cohasset Youth Lacrosse holds two practices each week, and has games on Sunday afternoon. Assistant coaches are not expected to attend every event, although the hope would be that they can make two of three per week.

In addition to coaches, Cohasset Youth Lacrosse is interested in developing referees who can work its games. Interested individuals will be required to take some officiating instruction classes during the winter, and may then be eligible to work games either with a partner or solo in the spring. Officiating fees have not been set for 2002, but are expected to be $50 or more per game.

For more information or to express your interest in coaching or officiating, call Chuck Jaffe, coordinator of youth lacrosse, at 781-383-9858.

OBITUARIES

Richard J. Fettig

A funeral Mass was celebrated for Richard J. Fettig, 68, of Scituate, a laborer, who died Dec. 31, 2001 at South Shore Hospital after a short illness.

He was raised and educated in Scituate, where he was a self-employed laborer for many years.

He leaves his two brothers, Howard of Framingham and James of Cotuit, and a sister, Marianne Vandreuil of East Sandwich.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was in Old St. Mary's Cemetery, Scituate.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home.

Donations may be made to the Norwell Visiting Nurse Association, 683 Main St., Norwell 02061.

William M. Fletcher

William M. Fletcher, 70, of Cohasset, owner of an art-book publishing firm and magazine, died Jan. 3, 2002 at home, after a long battle with throat cancer.

Mr. Fletcher started North Light Publishing, which became the largest publisher of how-to art books.

He was founder and publisher of Artist's Magazine and director of the North Light Book Club, which had more than 65,000 members.

He was an instructor for five years at the Famous Artists Painting School in Westport, Conn. before starting his publishing firm.

He graduated from Hebron Academy in Maine and attended Williams College in Williamstown, and the Arts Students' League in New York City.

Mr. Fletcher leaves his wife of more than 49 years, Verdella (Goddard) Fletcher; his two sons, William S. Fletcher of Westmoreland, N.H. and James G. Fletcher of Greenfield, N.H.; his two daughters, Patricia Fletcher Murphy of Antrim, N.H. and Sheryl Fletcher of Northfield, Vt.; two sisters, Alice Fletcher Freymann and Mary Louise Fletcher Pitts, both of Scituate; the late Saxton Woodbury Fletcher. He also leaves his five grandchildren, Griffin, Terra and Krista Fletcher and Sara and Alex Murphy.

The funeral service and interment was private.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made in Mr. Fletcher's memory to the Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Bay State Drive, Braintree 02184.

Lloyd M. Huskins

Lloyd M. Huskins, age 80, of Cohasset, retired general manager of Framingham Welding & Engineering Corporation, died Jan. 3, 2002 at South Shore Hospital, Weymouth.

Born in Boston, he lived in Hingham before moving to Cohasset 50 years ago.

Mr. Huskins worked at Bethlehem Steel during World War II. He also worked as a commercial lobster fisherman.

He was a graduate of Boston Mechanical Arts High School and studied metallurgy at M.I.T.

Mr. Huskins enjoyed traveling.

He leaves his wife, Helen T. (Murphy) Huskins; his two sons, Lloyd M. Huskins, Jr. of Cohasset and Timothy A. Huskins of Scituate; a brother, Arnold Huskins of Pittsfield; and his three grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was in Beechwood Cemetery, Cohasset.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made to St. Anthony's Parish Building Fund, 10 Summer St., Cohasset 02025.

POLICE BRIEF

Snow-related accident

Police cited the driver of an SUV for failure to stay within marked lanes in a snow-related accident early Tuesday morning.

Sgt. David Cogill said Chris Leighton, 25, of Hull was driving the 1992 Nissan Pathfinder when it skidded off the road and into a tree at the intersection of Beechwood and King streets at about 3:30 a.m.

Leighton and the two passengers were transported to South Shore Hospital where they were treated and released, Cogill said. Their injuries appeared to be minor, he said. The SUV was towed away.

The real decoy

Hingham carver carries on a truly American art

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

One of only two indigenous American art forms has its roots, and most of its acclaim, right here on the South Shore. While scrimshaw is a New England-based art tied to the whaling industry of Nantucket, decoy-carving can rightfully be claimed as the South Shore and Cape Cod's own for it's original practical use in the region's hunting tradition.

Such a rarefied art form has seen relatively few practitioners and even fewer masters over time. Even today, there are still a select few in the ranks of professional woodwork decoy artists nationally. One of them is Hingham's Robert Mosher, whose award-winning work is currently on exhibit at the Massachusetts Audubon Society's South Shore Sanctuary in Marshfield.

The show features 22 pieces, with enough refinement and diversity to reflect Mosher's more than 40-year experience with his craft. There are the standard duck like-nesses, most recalling the initial era of function before form, along with waterbirds, shorebirds, songbirds and even a mounted striped bass recreation.

STAFF PHOTOS/SUSAN HANEY

Hingham artisan Robert Mosher shows off a pair of bluebill ducks he carved. Mosher's extraordinary decoys are on display through Jan. 26 at the Massachusetts Audubon Society's South Shore Sanctuary in Marshfield.

Raised in Hingham, Mosher began carving decoys as a teenager in high school, his interest sparked by his first exposure to them when hunting with his uncle as a boy. Before long, the artist came to know the names of the original carving masters, most notably the late Elmer Crowell and Joseph Lincoln of East Harwich and Hingham respectively, who crafted the decoys he and his uncle used to lure ducks for dinner. Mosher made his own first decoys to "gun over" while duck hunting and, yes, he still hunts occasionally today.

Like Crowell and Lincoln, Mosher sought from early on to capture the essence of his subjects with emphasis on simplicity of shape and form as well as graphic paint patterns and colors, while avoiding clutter and over-detail. Consequently, several of the artist's show pieces acknowledge the Lincoln influence on an "in the style of" basis, such as complementing Bluebill and Mallard drake-hen sets, and Black Duck, Wood Duck and Merganser renderings.

Mosher's material of choice is northern white cedar, which he carves by hand using draw knives, hand knives and rasps. This wood, which the artist routinely journeys to Maine to stock up on, is friendly to varieties of shapes and forms, as Mosher's exhibit works extend to subjects such as plovers, egrets, swans and Canada geese.

"The artists' market is at a height right now for producing and selling decoys," said Mosher at the recent reception/lecture at the Audubon Society for his show. "There's some widespread public interest these days in decoys as an art form, and not just in New England. It's not bad for a craft that was once used mainly to generate supper."

Mosher also noted that works by his mentor, Crowell, have fetched as much as $300,000 at auction at Sotheby's in New York. The artist's own prices have not been quite so spectacular, much closer to the $170 apiece for which he recently sold a collection of carved shore birds. But he's pleased to mention that his work appears regularly in major decoy auctions.

Robert Mosher's carved birds will be on display through Jan. 26 at the Massachusetts Audubon Society's South Shore Sanctuary, Route 3A in Marshfield. For more information call (781) 837-9400.

Mosher's work can be seen and is for sale at Nine Points Sign Shop 105 South Street in Hingham, or at Robert's home address at 16 Water Street also in Hingham. For more information ca.ll (781)749-6766.

Rivers still flowin'

60s rock legend to perform Jan. 18 at Lombardo's

Johnny Rivers will perform Jan. 18 at Lombardo's in Randolph.

CORRESPONDENT

On stage, on the radio or behind the scenes, Johnny Rivers was a major presence of 1960s rock and progressive pop. A music-biz entrepreneur as well as performer, Rivers was as notable for founding two record labels, SoulCity and Dunhill Records, and producing or promoting the careers of "West Coast sound" artists such as the Mamas & the Papas, the 5th Dimension and songwriter Jimmy Webb as for his own finely-crafted stream of pop/rock hits including the Chuck Berry covers "Memphis" and "Maybelline," and "Mountain of Love," "Secret Agent Man," "Poor Side of Town" and "Summer Rain" to name just a few.

What's lesser known is Rivers' career since the 60s. The New York-born, Baton Rouge-raised singer/guitarist continued to have hits in the following decade, including the respective Huey "Piano" Smith and Beach Boys covers "Rockin' Pneumonia and the Boogie Woogie Flu" and "Help Me Rhonda" along with "Swayin' to the Music (Slow Dancin')." Rivers has never been away from recording or performing for long since the end of the 1970s, enjoying popularity overseas and particularly in South America. He also found a career resurgence with the wide-scale rediscovery of blues and roots music during the 90s, resulting in two well-praised recent albums on his re-formed SoulCity label, 1998s fresh take on blues, country and rockabilly roots, "Last Train to Memphis," and his triumphant return to his 60s-L.A. stomping grounds, Johnny Rivers Live! — Back at the Whisky released in 2000.

"I've never seen myself as an oldies act. I'm most inspired by the kind of roots music I listened growing up in the South — blues, country, rockabilly, R&B, gospel. I find that there's always new directions to follow in the music and new directions to take it."
Johnny Rivers

Fans who catch Rivers' act Friday at Lombardo's in Randolph can expect more than the predictable offering of vintage hits. They'll also hear a seamless, eclectic mix of Rivers' more recent, deeper-sourced material when the singer and his five-piece band appear in concert Jan. 18 at 8 p.m. The show was rescheduled from its original date of Nov. 2 due to flight cancellations after Sept. 11.

"We've always tried to keep the music fresh and vibrant, and not get stuck in any dead-end routines just playing the same songs the same way all the time," said Rivers, whose given name is John Ramistella. "We play the oldies shows sometimes when we go out on tour, but I've never seen myself as an oldies act. I'm most inspired by the kind of roots music I listened growing up in the South — blues, country, rockabilly, R&B, gospel. I find that there's always new directions to follow in the music and new directions to take it.

"Even the old hits, we often like to play them with a new twist or a new arrangement, give them an updated, contemporary feel and keep them from sounding boring. For instance, we never `Midnight Special' the same way twice. When you're in this business and you have a resourceful past of old hits, you have to play some or most of them when you're out on the road, as people like Bob Dylan, Paul McCartney and Elton John have to. But as an artist, you want to be creative and keep things fresh and interesting," Rivers said.

Rivers plays theatres, state fairs, festivals and casinos along with the occasional oldies show when touring internationally for usually some 50 dates per year. On the oldies circuit, which is where Rivers has most often appeared in the Boston area in recent years, the singer's inclinations towards mixing familiar hits with newer, roots-exploring, more adventurous material has even been ear-opening and enlightening to demographic audiences more used to paler, routine, greatest-hits-live sets from the likes of Gary Lewis, Gary Puckett, Peter Noone or others of Rivers' pop contemporaries of the 60s.

More recently, pockets of loyal, longtime Rivers fans in various areas around the U.S., including Boston, have launched efforts to make their voices heard, circulating petitions to persuade the powers-that-be to recognize the singer with an induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. To date, Rivers has yet to be nominated, much less inducted, in the Hall's sixteen-year history, and to many, the honor and acknowledgement are well overdue.

"I think it's gratifying to have that fan-base out there. I'm not involved in this whole effort personally, but no matter how well you've done in the past, it's always great to have this ongoing listener-ship for someone who's been around as long as I have."

Johnny Rivers will perform at Lombardo's in Randolph Jan. 18 at 8 p.m. For tickets call (866) 468-7619, visit www.ticketweb.com or stop into local Strawberries outlets.

Pasta with Chicken and Broccoli

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Some dishes have no history and, unlike Beef Wellington or Peach Melba, they do not fire the imagination of food writers. They are born homeless, without lineage, and then soon become ubiquitous without public acclaim. However, this particular dish – Pasta with Chicken and Broccoli – deserves attention since it is simple, quick, and a one-dish meal. When well-made, each ingredient is perfectly cooked, the textures and flavors playing off one another like musical instruments. However, we've all had egregious variations on this theme – overcooked broccoli, tough, dry chicken, and a watery sauce – so a bit of investigation seemed in order.

I began with the chicken. I used boneless, skinless chicken breast which was tender and worked well in combination with the pasta and broccoli. The easiest way to prepare the chicken was to simply cut it into bite sized pieces. I tried dredging the pieces in flour but the sauced turned out muddy. Once chopped and well seasoned, I sautéed it over medium high heat in a combination of butter and olive oil until dark golden brown. I found that, for best results, I needed to remove the chicken from the pan and then add it back to the dish at the final stages.

I wanted the broccoli to be tender though not soft. I tried adding it to the skillet to braise in the chicken stock but this idea was discarded since it often resulted in overcooking. (Cooking broccoli requires precision timing and reducing a sauce is imprecise at best.) I tried steaming but this requires an extra pot. Then I remember that Italian cooks often add such ingredients to the pasta as it cooks so I added the broccoli about 3 minutes before the pasta was ready. The broccoli was just tender and then I added it to the sauté pan (along with the pasta) and cooked it for an additional 2 minutes until it was perfectly done.

As for the pasta, I preferred penne, ziti or fusili. (Any pasta that is about the same size as the broccoli and chicken pieces is fine.) I removed the pasta from the cooking water 2 minutes shy of the al dente directions on the package – 9 to 13 minutes for most shapes – and then finished the cooking in the skillet along with the broccoli and sauce.

To build a flavorful sauce, I removed the chicken from the pan, lowered the heat, and added three cloves of minced garlic. (Onion and garlic added little to this dish.) To deglaze the pan I tested Marsala, sherry, dry vermouth and white wine and vastly preferred the latter. Then I added 2 cups chicken stock which, once reduced, would still be enough to coat the pound of pasta. At this point I raised the heat and let the liquid reduce by about two thirds or until a wooden spoon left a trail at the bottom of the pan. The liquid should be thickened, but not quite syrupy, and amber in color. To finish, I added one tablespoon lemon juice, the pasta, broccoli, chicken, one tablespoon butter and two tablespoons olive oil. Over medium heat the mixture is sautéed together for two minutes to finish. Lots of Parmesan cheese and freshly ground black pepper should be considered part of the dish and not just a garnish.

PASTA WITH CHICKEN AND BROCCOLI

Use the Zyliss garlic press if you want to make short work of the three garlic cloves in this recipe. A healthy amount of salt and pepper are essential to make this dish flavorful.

3 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons butter
2 boneless, skinless chicken breast halves (one whole) cut into bite sized pieces
1 tablespoon salt plus additional salt for seasoning the chicken
Freshly ground black pepper
3 cloves garlic, minced or pressed
1 cup white wine
2 cups low sodium chicken broth such as Swanson's
1 pound penne, ziti, rigatoni, or other similar sized pasta
1/2 pound broccoli florets, about 3 cups
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Freshly grated Parmesan cheese

1. Heat one tablespoon each olive oil and butter in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Liberally season chicken pieces with salt and freshly ground pepper. Add chicken to the skillet and cook, turning frequently, until deep golden brown, about 8 minutes. Remove and set aside. Reduce heat to medium low. Meanwhile bring 4 quarts of water to a boil in a large pot.

2. Add garlic to skillet and cook until fragrant, about 30 seconds. Add wine and scrape up brown bits stuck to the bottom of the pan with a wooden spoon or spatula. Boil until wine is reduced by 3/4, about 1 minute. Add chicken stock, increase heat to medium-high and boil until a wooden spoon leaves a trail on the bottom of the pan and liquid is amber colored and slightly thickened, about 5 minutes. (At this point the sauce can be held with the heat extinguished until pasta is ready.) Once water has reached a rolling boil, add 1-tablespoon salt and pasta and cook until pasta is 5 minutes shy of al dente package directions. (The cooking times will vary depending on the brand and shape of the pasta.) Add the broccoli florets to the pasta pot and continue cooking for 3 minutes longer. Once cooked, drain pasta and broccoli and add to the skillet set over medium heat. Add the browned chicken pieces back to the skillet along with the lemon juice and remaining two tablespoons olive oil and tablespoon butter. Sauté for two minutes stirring gently. Adjust seasonings, adding salt to taste if necessary. Serve immediately with freshly grated Parmesan cheese and plenty of ground black pepper.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 9

Take advantage of one of the best days of the month for launching new enterprises. Sign contracts, make important decisions, purchases and changes in your business or personal life. The moon enters optimistic Sagittarius at 4:57 a.m. An alignment of Mercury/Neptune at 7:01 a.m. can make for a foggy start. However, influences turn around completely after that, and the green light goes on at 8:00 a.m. An applying alignment of Mercury and Saturn makes this a great evening to work or study. You can be most productive.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 10

Mercury forms a flowing 120-degree contact to Saturn at 3:37 a.m. There is a rough spot in effect between 8:54-11:54 a.m., however, when the moon and Pluto align. Others may be hypersensitive; hidden feelings or deep resentments can surface. Don't make waves; keep it light. Fortunately, this influence passes over quickly, and the afternoon rates high across the board. It is okay to initiate new activities. Get back in the swing of favorite sports, exercise routines, hobbies.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 11

At 1:49 a.m. the Sagittarius moon becomes inactive for the remainder of the morning. It may be difficult to focus on practical matters and easy to waste time and energy. To avoid spinning your wheels, make up a list of things to do and stick to it. At 12:18 p.m. the moon enters Capricorn, beginning the final windup to this month's new moon. Plan to handle routine chores, errands and follow through on unfinished projects.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 12

The dark side of a new moon prompts you to renew your spirit through time spent in solitude, meditation, art or nature. Rather than starting new activities, this is a time to tackle old projects or issues that have been left hanging, review and redo. Others may be pensive or anxious. A kind word or thoughtful gesture will make all the difference.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 13

The new moon culminates at 8:29 a.m., when the sun and moon align at 23-degrees of Capricorn. This is a great day to spend quality time with family and close friends.Zero in on promises you have made and follow through. At 2:24 p.m. the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive until 9:41 p.m., when it enters Aquarius. An applying alignment of the sun and Venus highlights social activities this evening.

MONDAY, JANUARY 14

It may be difficult to get back to daily routines and responsibilities. The moon travels in free-spirited Aquarius, and aligns with idealistic Neptune at 1:13 p.m. On the other hand, influences are ideal for working to assist people who are less fortunate or for causes you believe in. Team sports, community projects, charitable endeavors get the green light. The moon forms a harmonious contact to Saturn at 2:27 p.m. and with Mercury at 11:43 p.m.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 15

The Aquarius moon may point you in directions you do not normally travel. Keep an open mind. Most likely, things won't go as planned. Look for the silver lining. You may experience sudden flashes of insight, new understanding. Chat, network, collaborate. The Aquarius moon aligns with its planetary ruler, Uranus, at 7:25 p.m. and becomes inactive.

A lark in the 'Park'

Helen Mirren is a bit uncomfortable around Stephen Frye's prying about.

Gosford Park (B)

If you had to spend eternity with ever-optimistic Dr. Pangloss or Theodore Roosevelt's waspish daughter, Alice Roosevelt Longworth, whose motto was if you have nothing nice to say about someone, come sit right next to me, whom would you choose? Sitting, sometimes fitfully, sometimes not, through Robert Altman's slick pastiche, "Gosford Park," I kept beseeching the cinema gods: Please give us another Maggie Smith insult! As Constance, Countess of Trentham, impoverished but acting as if she wasn't a remittance woman, Smith is the movie's black bile. To her, gold-diggers are beneath contempt, an American movie director is not quite human — and Jewish, too — lusts not fully smothered by decorum are unendurable. Her sense of her own superiority easily makes a fancy weekend serve as an ideal forum for judgmentalism.

These aristocrats, would-be aristocrats, pseudo-aristocrats, moneyed or non-moneyed hangers-on and their servants gather for a shooting party at a luxe mansion, and the upstairs-downstairs relationships are quickly delineated. We peer in to see who's sleeping with whom; for instance, the lord of the manor, Sir William McCordle (Michael Gambon), who keeps his relative, the countess, in funds, is sleeping with sexy servant Elsie (Emily Watson); his wife, Lady Sylvia (Kristin Scott Thomas), spotting a likely boy toy, a supposed Scots servant (Ryan Phillippe) but actually a handsome American actor whose lover is an American producer (Bob Balaban), commands him to bring her a glass of warm milk at 1 a.m. Ah ha, one says, Ah ha.

It's not all sex and snootiness. A famous actor (Jeremy Northam) who plays charming aristocrats is charming and also plays piano and sings; dark broodings — are broodings ever light? — make even more gloomy the ill-lighted confines below stairs; some deep secrets — much better than shallow secrets, don't you know? — poke their spunky tendrils through the cracks, yearning to be unearthed; and murder most foul is afoot — actually, is murder ever a-kidney?

Ostensibly the movie's centerpiece, murder is just an excuse to ratchet the frothy comedy up (or down) a notch into what it needn't be. We should care about whodunnit and we do hope it's like Agatha Christy's "Murder on the Orient Express," where everyone dunnit, but when we finally find out who did it, we're pooped and the explanation lets us down. Sometimes it's best not to know. This may be the least consequential murder, ever, in a murder mystery.

The cast is dreamy: Helen Mirren's perfect servant is perfectly morose; Stephen Fry's inept police inspector is the anti-Poirot, and fine turns by Alan Bates, Charles Dance, Derek Jacobi, Clive Owen, James Wilby and a dozen others give vivid flesh and blood to the splendiferous early 1930s ambiance. "Gosford Park" slows down at many junctures; there are some characters, like two sleek chaps who come, hover about and leave, and I'll be darned if I know just who or what they are; and if you're looking for subtlety in clues, look elsewhere. Still, High Wasp minutely precise period detail and shrewd acting are not to be sniffed at, and every few minutes Maggie Smith lifts her hooded eyes and flattens someone with a choice apercu.

Group wants to save Great Neck from development

Sees parkland expanded by acquiring parcels

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The easy part for a group of local citizens, who have joined forces with the Cohasset Land Conservation Trust, a non-profit organization, will be to raise awareness of one of the town's open space gems — Great Brewster Woods.

Owned by the land trust, the 25-acre parcel provides walking trails where people like Mimi White can escape to commune with nature.

"I walk down Beach Street, cut in and come out by St. Stephen's then I go to French Memories for coffee and a croissant, turn around and come back," the Sheldon Road resident said. "I'm a regular user."

But the challenge that lies ahead for the Great Neck Preservation Group — consisting of Beach Street, Little Harbor and Sandy Cove neighbors and other concerned citizens — is winning support to obtain an additional 13-plus acres of land off Beach Street that is contiguous to Great Brewster Woods and could be added to the town's open space rolls. The privately owned land, which is also part of Great Neck, an area of spectacular ledge outcroppings and woods above and east of the common, is being eyed for development. If acquired for conservation purposes, the town could combine it with Great Brewster Woods to provide a largely contiguous tract of open space for passive recreation.

Barry and Carla Getto, who live on seven acres in Great Neck, have agreed to permanently restrict development of their land contingent on the open space plan working out. But persuading the other two landowners may not be easy.

Ellen Morrissey, who owns two lots, said the land is very valuable with "major views."

"Plans are to build three houses on 14 acres — that's not hard to live with," she said. Morrissey, who described the Great Neck group's effort as "an absurd waste of time," didn't think the Town of Cohasset would support losing the valuable tax revenue that developing the property would bring.

No pact yet on plant's looks

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Sewer Commission and residents concerned over the aesthetics of the Elm Street sewer plant are finally on the same page...maybe.

After weeks of contentious debate between the two sides, it seems there may be an agreed upon design for improvements to the plant. While nothing is set in stone, the current plan calls for the sides of the main building to be painted and the roof to be redone. Residents are also asking for windows to be put in on the side of the main building and for landscaping to screen the outer buildings.

"We're coming to a nice resolution," Sewer Commission chairman Gary Vanderweil told selectmen Tuesday.

However, some residents feel the

A new display honoring all 22 Cohasset soldiers, who lost their lives in wartime since World War I, is now in place on the wall across from the Town Clerk's office. Last September, selectmen approved the project, which was paid for through private donations from local citizens.

If Cohasset High School lacks anything it's not a motivated student body — whose scores on MCAS, SATs and Advanced Placement tests are among the best in the state — but the ability to offer a range of electives.

The students' high achievement has a lot to do with block scheduling, says Principal Michael Jones. Block scheduling is an education system in which classes are 90 minutes in length and meet four times a week, rather than the 45 minutes a day in a "conventional" high school.

But increasing time on task enables students to move more quickly through academic requirements. Blocks also provide teachers will much more flexibility in their instructional time.

"Students get through their required courses and can take upper-class electives, but we don't have them to offer."
— Principal Michael Jones

"With five periods of block scheduling, students can move through a course in one semester instead of two, and complete eight or nine courses in a year — as opposed to six or seven in a conventional high school," Jones said.

That means a student can take two years of math or two years of science in a single year.

"That advantage in part accounts for our high MCAS scores," Jones said. Teachers also teach three courses at a time, rather than four, so with class sizes at 22 or 23, teachers work with 70 students each semester rather than 100 or more.

But the "down" side in a small school like Cohasset High is the need to offer more upper-class electives to students, who have completed their required courses, and not having enough staff to do that.

If Jones has his way, however, that will start to change. He's asking for two new teaching positions in his

South Shore Vo-Tech gets high marks

Perceptions can be misleading. The common understanding in Cohasset about the South Shore Vocational Technical High School is that it is filled with students who could not handle the rigorous academic schedule provided by Cohasset Public Schools. That is not the case.

"The perception of our school as not being as academically competitive as others is difficult to change," said Supt. John Kosko. "However, once people become informed about what we offer, they realize their ideas are inaccurate."

The South Shore Vocational Technical High School is celebrating its 40th year in existence but has yet to capture the hearts, and students of Cohasset.

Historically, there have never been many Cohasset teens at VoTech, and this year, out of 540 students there are only seven.

"Cohasset is pretty homogenous," said Cohasset Supt. Edward Malvey. "Most in town are more interested in a traditional track that sends students to a four-year college program after graduation."

Vo-Tech draws from eight towns on the South Shore including Abington, Hanover, Hanson, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate, Whitman and Cohasset. Whitman and Rockland routinely supply the most students and Cohasset consistently sends the fewest.

It's not from a lack of trying that VoTech has such a small population of Cohasset students. The school visits the eighth-grade every year and gives a presentation, which includes a video, to the teens.

"We try to communicate to the kids that there is a vast array of programs we offer and they are not eliminating college by attending our school," said guidance counselor Kate Schwabe. "It's not a dead end by any means."

While Vo-Tech does send students onto higher education, about 40 per-

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield is set to retire

Will leave after 42 years of service

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Harold Litchfield, Superintendent of the Department of Public Works, officially announced his retirement in a letter to selectmen last week.

Lithcfield, who said he has enjoyed his time in Cohasset, will be leaving his post on April 1 .

"He's the most hardworking and knowledgeable employee I have ever worked with," Town Manager Mark Haddad said. "He will be very hard to replace."

Litchfield came to work for the highway department as a laborer back on Nov. 10, 1960.

He was elected as highway surveyor back in 1978 and served six, three-year terms before Cohasset created a Department of Public Works in 1995.

Litchfield worked his way up the ladder to truck driver and heavy equipment operator before being elected to head the department.

The DPW oversees the highways, the cemeteries and parks, the RTF and the maintenance of all town buildings.

As well, the Cohasset DPW, with its three big and five small sanders and four plows, is responsible for plowing the 37 miles of accepted roads in Cohasset and 11 miles of private ways during inclement weather. MassHighway takes care of Route 3A, a state highway.

What most impressed Haddad about Litchfield's accomplishments is that he worked with limited resources. There are four people who work in the highway department, four who work in the cemetery and park department, 3 fi positions at the RTF and four in the maintenance department.

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield plans to step down after 42 years of public service.

"There are not a lot of people who work in the DPW," Haddad said. "He's able to get water from a stone."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said Litchfield is an outstanding highway surveyor and described his retirement as "a great loss to the town."

Selectman Michael Sullivan agreed.

"He's done a fabulous job for over 40 years," Sullivan said. "He always brought humor to the job."

Haddad said Litchfield planned on retiring some years ago but he was able to convince him to stay on longer.

Haddad said he is not sure what the process will be for replacing Litchfield but will take Litchfield's recommendation of Carl Sestito "into strong consideration." This will be Haddad's third replacement in less than a year. He is currently in the process of finding replacements for Police Chief Brian Noonan and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln.

"We have lost a lot of hard-working dedicated people in the last year," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris.

Litchfield says he has no immediate plans for his retirement just some rest and relaxation.

Litchfield was paid $65,000 last year.

Meeting schedule

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall of Jan. 14.

Advisory Committee, Jan. 17, 7 p.m.

Cohasset Conservation Commission, Jan. 17, 7:30 p.m.

Senior Housing, Jan. 23, 9 a.m.

Democratic Caucus, Feb. 2, 9:30 a.m.

School Committee, Jan. 24, 7:30 p.m.

Water Commission, Jan. 17, 7:30 p.m.

Committee on Town History, Jan. 21, 7:30 p.m.

Youth Resources Committee, Jan. 29, 7 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Jan. 24, 7:30 p.m.

Correction

In a story about the library ground breaking, the Mariner should have reported items from the old library will not be transferred from the old Paul Pratt Library building to the new library until construction is completed. The size of the Paul Pratt building is not 24,630 square feet, as reported, but 9,300 square feet. The lot is 24,630 square feet.

Greenbush concerns

Selectmen chairman Fred Koed wrote a letter to the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority outlining concerns selectmen have about the contract that was awarded and asks the MBTA to reject the low bid. Two weeks ago, the MBTA awarded the construction bid to Balfour Beatty Construction Company of England which has teamed with Jay Cashman Incorporated for the project.

In his letter, Koed outlines several reasons the construction companies should not be trusted.

The State of Pennsylvania has banned Balfour Beatty from working on state projects for three years and fined it $7 million. As well, Balfour Beatty will stand trial in South Africa for its connection with a multimillion dollar bribery and corruption case to win an engineering contract. Officials for the company are accused of accepting more than $2 million in bribes while constructing a hydroelectric dam. Balfour Beatty was also involved in a 1994 bribery scandal in Malaysia.

Koed said the board is troubled by the reports of prior problems and feels Balfour Beatty is not qualified to work on Greenbush construction.

ZBA resignation

Lisa Hewitt Dick, 3 Arrowhead St., will be resigning from the Zoning Board of Appeals. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he received a letter informing him of the decision earlier this week.

Chairman of the ZBA Woody Chittick recommended Mark Dunne, 21 Beach St., to take her place. Chittick said Dunne's background as a developer would serve the board well.

"The one skill that is lacking on the ZBA is a developer's expertise," Chittick said. "Dunne is a replacement who will serve the town well."

Selectmen approved the appointment.

School board meeting reaches boiling point

Heating system is work in progress

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

School budget discussions have been known to make temperatures rise.

But during the first School Committee meeting of the New Year, the sweltering conditions were not caused by high emotion.

The new boilers are installed and working, explained a rosy-cheeked Supt. Edward Malvey to the committee and those in attendance, who resorted to using their budget summaries as fans. The school board meets in the old high school Dorr gym, which is being used as a makeshift library during construction.

The days of the old boiler system — which had operated on a "wing and a prayer" in recent years — are over, but some of the vestiges of heating system remain such as, the 50-year-old thermostats and air-handling units that are still in place. Those new delivery systems will be phased in as the middle-high school renovation project continues.

"It's toasty here. But at my office you get into the deep freeze."

— Supt. Edward Malvey

"If you feel the heat, that's a good sign — we're warm," said Malvey, explaining the new boilers were working into old pipes.

"It's toasty here," he said. "But at my office you get into the deep freeze." Malvey's office is at the other end of the school, in the middle-school wing.

Simon Tempest, school building project manager, said in a telephone interview that heating problems, which are preexisting, have nothing to do with the contractor. He said plans are to install temporary radio controls around the building that can relay messages when to shut off back to the boiler to avoid over heating some areas.

"We're aware of it and we're attempting to resolve it," he said about heating fluctuations. Tempest said when the new heating system is completely installed it will have sophisticated computer controls.

But in the interim, Malvey, who was clad in shirtsleeves, said the winter could be a warm one for the School Committee.

"This winter is going to be real warm for us until we can coordinate the timing so we're not freezing one side and toasting the other side," he said.

That provided little comfort for those in attendance and prompted one woman to say she'd lost two pounds that night.

School budget talks begin

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"Base Budget," "Needs Budget," and "Town Manager Budget" are not the same thing, Supt. Edward Malvey said.

In the fiscal year 2003 "worksheet" distributed to School Committee members at their last meeting, Malvey explained the three budgets, which are hundreds of thousands of dollars apart.

If the proposed budget is level funded to only include contractual salary increases it would jump by about $410,000 — a 4 percent hike over last year's $10.6 million budget.

The proposed "needs" budget that includes requests from the principals and department heads is 11.5 percent or $1.174 million over last year.

But Town Manager Mark Haddad is asking the schools to take the middle ground and keep the total budget increase within $600,000 or just under 6 percent.

"This is a work in progress," Malvey said about budget talks. "No final decisions have been made and no final budget figure is established." He said the target date to finalize the budget is mid-February.

Haddad is also recommending not fully funding the school budget at the annual Town Meeting as has been the practice for the past two years. In his budget report to selectmen and the Advisory Committee he explained it is "crucial" this year to follow that course of action because of uncertainty over state aid. School union contracts are also being negotiated.

"Waiting until the fall, the School Committee will be able to determine its needs more precisely," Haddad stated. He is therefore recommending an increase of 4.88 percent or $500,000 at this time, and if the schools need an additional increase of $100,000 as was the case in fiscal year 2002 – the overall increase would be 5.88 percent. The additional money would be appropriated at the fall Special Town Meeting.

Malvey told the School Committee the school department doesn't necessarily agree with Haddad's recommendation to "under-fund" the budget again.

"We expressed, we weren't proposing that ourselves this year," he said.

The total Cohasset proposed operating budget, including the schools, is $27.8 million for fiscal year 2003, which starts July 1.

Not enough elective courses for Cohasset High upperclassmen fiscal year 2003 budget request, one in English and one in Social Studies, at a salary of about $40,000 each.

Increasing enrollment is also driving the request. This spring CHS will graduate 81 students and expects to have 104 freshmen in the fall — an increase of more than 20.

"The increase will impact almost every discipline," Jones said. The two new positions will also provide more flexibility in terms of offering electives some of which, like psychology, are oversubscribed.

The elimination of study halls, which became history when state education reform took effect in the early 1990s requiring a minimum number of hours of "direct instruction," also contributes to the need for more electives. In order to achieve the state requirement, students are expected to take courses throughout the day.

"We never really had the staff to schedule students for classes every period," Jones said in an interview Friday. He explained students have been able to undertake an independent study, a teacher assistance-ship or community service project to fill in the gaps. Some of those programs were excellent but some were "fillers," Jones said.

"We want to make sure those are viable academic options and don't constitute simply a holding area for seniors until they graduate," he explained. Some seniors are taking two or three successive quarters of gym because they couldn't be scheduled elsewhere. More electives would mean more options, Jones said.

"Students get through their required courses and can take upper-class electives, but we don't have them to offer," he said. Thirty-six signed up for psychology, for example, and 31 are in a class on domestic issues. Jones would like to be able to offer electives in journalism and drama and be able to maintain some classes with small enrollments.

Jones presented his request for new teaching positions at a recent School Committee meeting as part of his $4.7 million fiscal year 2003 budget proposal.

School Committee member Chartis Langmaid said Cohasset can't be as flexible as large school districts and taxpayers should realize the number of teachers is not only driven by enrollment but by the courses students need.

"It's ridiculous having seniors at CHS twiddling their thumbs," she said.

Supt. Edward Malvey said schools have been driven by the "accountability era."

"If we truly look at what education is all about, it is to enrich a student's life and we need to get back to that," he said. "I would love to see us build in more variety so youngsters have something they can excel in — to me this is what education is all about."

He also said offering electives "of a quality nature" is something the school department would be dealing with over the next several years.

Jones said Friday high academic standards at CHS have not overburdened the students.

"They are active, engaged, high-achieving students," Jones said, adding a walk in halls also shows they are a happy group.

"There are a lot of smiles," he said.

Sewer rates to increase in July

The Sewer Commission presented its proposed $881,000 Fiscal Year 2003 budget to Selectmen Tuesday. The budget increases the rate for users in North Cohasset as well as in central Cohasset. In North Cohasset, the rate will be raised from $4 to $5.46 per 100 cubic feet. In central Cohasset, the rate will be raised from $3.70 to $4.93 per 100 cubic feet. A fixed fee of $35 a quarter will be kept in place. The rate changes will take effect in July.

According to sewer commissioner Raymond Kasperowicz, one of the reasons the rates are going up is because the town is connecting almost 700 new users to the sewer with most of the additions coming from the Veterans Hill side of Lily Pond. The sewer department will also switch to an enterprise fund, which allows the Sewer Commission to make necessary purchases, such as replacement parts, without going to Town Meeting for an appropriation. The enterprise fund is funded by the users.

"The enterprise fund makes it easier for us to make improvements to our plant," said Gary Vanderweil, chairman of the Sewer Commission. "We are now self-sufficient."

Burning season is underway

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis through May 1 for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch Center at 781-383-0260 from 9 am.-2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance, the fire department says. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact the issuing of permits. Burning hours are 10 a.m.-4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forest debris. Burning shall be conducted on land nearest to the place were the debris came from. Burning must be conducted at least 75 feet away from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover.

While burning, the fire must be attended at all times until completely extinguished. Have a water hose, rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

COLD SEASON

Hello Cohasset. The middle of January is here and so are the viruses and other bugs that plague us around this time each year. Make sure to keep plenty of tissues around, encourage a lot of hand-washing and if your child is sick, please keep them home from school or other activities to help slow the spreading of all this yucky stuff! I want to remind all parents of two no-school days that are coming up. This coming Monday, Jan. 21 there is no school in celebration and remembrance of Martin Luther King and the following Monday, Jan. 28 is a no-school day for Cohasset Public Schools for a professional day. Who knows, maybe we will get some more snow for these days at home.

HONEST FEELINGS

I wanted to share a little personal note about a column that I had written before the holidays. I am sure a lot of you remember the column that I had written in complete frustration with peoples behaviors and attitudes, including my own. I was very nervous about that column and actually left town for the day when it came out. I was so shocked to come home to four messages that night and then, an additional 13 in the days to follow. Yes, three of them were very negative and that I had expected and is part of sharing your views and feelings with others. The other comments were all in favor of the column and several actually thanked me for pointing out these behaviors and issues.

The two most heart-warming and mind-opening comments were from an 11-year-old girl and a 87-year-old citizen, both who were so honest and took the time to share their own feelings with me. This amazing 11-year-old had just read the column with her parents and her words were, "I don't know why all the grown-ups get so mad and grouchy, I am glad that they don't have to come to my school or go on the bus. Well, at least if they did, Mr. Callahan and the bus drivers could get them in trouble and make them have some punishment. I keep trying to help my friends be nice even when it is a hard thing to be nice about, it doesn't always work but sometimes it does."

Then, I received a call from a dear elderly citizen who was in tears as we talked and of course, my tears were flowing as well. This woman has lived in Cohasset for most of her life and she says that the last 10-15 years have been horrible for her to witness the behaviors of adults my age (in our 30s-40s) and then, to see how our children behave. As she goes to church and no one tries to help her when needed or on the few occasions that she gets to the stores, she says it is so upsetting for her to watch and listen to all the negative behaviors and comments that come from so many. When I asked her why she thought this was happening, her answer was "I don't really know, maybe we all just forget what is important to everyone and focus too much on ourselves." This young child and touching elderly woman really made a difference to me.

Thank you so much for these phone calls and also, to everyone who comments by email or phone. I know that for me, I have so much to work on, does anyone care to join me?

COLLEGE ACCEPTANCE

Joel R. Carpenter of Cohasset, was among 55 Boston College High School seniors who recently received word that they had been accepted at the colleges and universities of their choice. The colleges and universities eagerly accepted these students because of their excellence and promise in academics, extracurricular activities, sports and community service. Joel has been accepted at St. Lawrence University. Great news, Joel and the best of luck to you.

Amanda Cellucci, a senior at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham, has been accepted under the early decision program to Roger Williams University Feinstein College of Arts & Sciences in Bristol, Rhode Island. She will be a member of the freshman class of 2006 entering in the fall. Amanda will be an elementary education major. Her parents are so proud of her as they should be. Congratulations.

KINDERGARTEN SIGNUPS

Speaking of schools and whatnot, it is registration time at the Joseph Osgood School for all new, incoming Kindergarten children. Starting this week, you can go to the office at the Osgood with a copy of your child's birth certificate and sign him/her up for a fantastic year in Kindergarten. This process will be ongoing throughout the remainder of the year but why wait when you can take care of it now. If you have any questions at all, please call the main office at 781-383-6117.

QUILT SHOW

Remember to mark your calendars for Saturday, March 2 as the Second Congregational Church will hold its ninth Annual Quilt Show and Luncheon. Proceeds from this event benefit the Children's AIDS Program in Mattapan and REACH OUT and READ, a program at Boston Medical Center's pediatric clinic which provides young children with a new book at every check up. With more than 55 quilts on display each year, this show is a great success. If you would like to show a quilt or have any questions, call DeeDee at the church office at 781-383-0345 or Carol Sandblom at 781-383-1812 by Jan. 21.

'BEACH BASH'

Looking for a taste of summer? Don't forget about the South Shore Art Center's Wintertime "Beach Bash" being held on Saturday, January 26 at the Atlantica from 7 p.m.-12 a.m.. Enjoy the transformation of the restaurant into a summertime resort with beach games, lifeguards, summer sounds and more. Tickets for this event are $100 per person($85 for members of the SSAC) and include a wonderful dinner buffet from clam chowder to beef tenderloin! The popular local band, "The Grateful Dads" will keep everyone dancing all evening long. For tickets or more information, call 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org

AMATEUR GARDENERS

The Amateur Gardeners of Cohasset will hold its January meeting on Tuesday, Jan. 22 at 9 a.m. at the Lightkeepers Cottage on Government Island. An easy and attractive craft project is planned for the program. All are welcome.

CHS 20TH REUNION

The next meeting for planning the Class of 1982 20th Reunion will be in Cohasset on Sunday eve, Feb 10. If you are interested in helping out or if you know of anyone from Class of 1982, please have them contact Marcy Brown Fleming at 781-585-9913 or email her at marcydon @msn.com

That is all for this week. Please have all your news, photos and event information to me no later than Monday mornings by noon. All photos can be dropped off at Cohasset News in an envelope marked "Cohasset Mariner, Around Town." Have a great week.

Williams lends an ear to those affected by Sept. 11

Psychologist Bob Williams, shown here in his Cohasset home, volunteers as a disaster mental health specialist with the Red Cross.

Some people have moved on since Sept. 11, and some have not.

Bob Williams, 217 N. Main St., recently returned from a trip to New Jersey where he worked with the Red Cross as a Disaster Mental Health specialist.

Williams, a psychologist whose practice is in Quincy, has been volunteering with the Red Cross since 1995 in as part of its Disaster Response Network. The program takes psychologists away from their practice for a two-week period to help where ever it is needed.

"Two weeks is about the maximum amount of time a mental health practitioner can get away for," he said. This was Williams' fourth assignment.

Before heading to New Jersey, Williams worked locally trying to help those severely affected by the tragedy. He helped at the airport aiding workers who may have had stress reactions, feelings of guilt, and other mental problems due to Sept. 11. He was stationed in New Jersey from Dec. 3 - 16.

In New Jersey, Williams volunteered at Liberty State Park which is a rail station set up as a disaster relief center. He said he saw up to 50 families a day, but the work with them wasn't necessarily the hardest part of the job.

"There was a wall of remembrance as you walked into the station," he said. "Seeing all those pictures and poems dedicated to those who lost their lives was the most difficult thing." Williams also said leaving his post and coming home was not easy.

"After developing a relationship with many of the co-workers and the patients it was difficult to walk away," he said.

Williams said he helped in any area he was needed but primarily, "helped with the families of those who worked in the World Trade Center."

Williams was supposed to work eight-hour shifts but would not leave until the last person who needed help exited the hall. The center was open from 8 a.m. to midnight.

"We made a difference," he said. While there, he worked not only with families of victims but also with other Red Cross workers who had been on the scene for sometime..

"They needed some support as well," he said. He added that the Red Cross was there to provide a compassionate presence.

Disaster Mental Health relief is a relatively new field for the Red Cross. Williams said in the last six or seven years the program has gained acceptance.

"Mental health is a funny thing," he said. "It's not as tangible as some other areas but can be just as effective if not more so."

Mary Thang, a spokesman for the Red Cross, said the mental health aspect to a tragedy cannot be taken lightly.

"Due to our past experience with airplane tragedies we knew how important mental health counseling was in these situations," she said. She added she anticipated the Red Cross will provide relief to the victim's families for years to come.

Williams said while in New Jersey, he advised patients on how to get back to a normal routine, especially around the holidays. "I would tell them to get a Christmas tree, open presents with their children and so forth. It's really important to get back to feeling normal," he said.

Williams' other assignments included the West Virginia floods in 1996, the Minnesota tornadoes in 1998, and the tragic deaths of six Worcester firefighters in 1999. However, he said the Sept. 11 tragedy was the most difficult to deal with.

"This was the worst assignment because of the magnitude of the disaster," he said. "To think someone did this intentionally cut across all sorts of cultural and ethnic lines. This was an international tragedy."

Williams said he became involved in the Disaster Mental Health program because he wanted to learn how to function under exceptional circumstances.

"I want to be the one who knows what's going on under extreme conditions," he said.

Williams worked at Boston City Hospital after receiving his Ph.D. from Boston University. He has worked at his office in Quincy for 17 years and specializes in addiction and trauma. He grew up in Cohasset and worked as a permanent intermittent police office for seven years while he attended graduate school.

OPINION

The sewer plant's looks

The most important thing, and what the Sewer Commission and its engineers can pride in, is the sewer treatment plant — with its state-of-the-art treatment system — is no longer a polluter.

In the debate over the sewer plant's "new clothes," it might be easy to forget the state's court order that the town solve its wastewater problems across town or face potential fines.

From all accounts the new treatment system is doing the job, so much so that the influx of fresh water into the harbor raised concern among lobstermen a while back.

That being said, however, it's not surprising that seeing a warehouse-looking structure emerge in the salt marsh caught the neighbors' attention. The marsh behind the Paul Pratt Library provides a beautiful, peaceful vista for dozens of homes. Although the original plant was also located there, the facility was much lower and less visible.

We've heard stories about a sewer commissioner appearing in an abutter's driveway with a collection of paint chips as the only premeditation that went into the exterior of the structure.

In hindsight, the commissioners surely wish they'd called the Design Review Board in for a consultation.

But in all fairness we've sat through some pretty heated Sewer Commission meetings during which homeowners were ready to do battle over access to the sewer. So we can see how the commission, which is occupied with sewer connections and access, could have underestimated the public outcry over a corrugated building.

No one is arguing that the new wastewater treatment equipment needs to be protected and therefore, the "new" plant needs a building over it.

The good news is the Sewer Commission and neighbors appear to be trying to reach a solution that will improve the plant's appearance for a reasonable cost.

When Ralph Venning wrote back in 1650, "All the beauty of the world, 'tis but skin deep" – he couldn't have had a Sewer Treatment plant in mind.

But, again, in this situation while the wrapper is important aesthetically — it's what's inside that really counts.

Legislative seminar for citizens offered

The office of state Senator Robert L. Hedlund is now accepting applications for the Citizens Legislative Seminar (CLS). The program is designed to familiarize citizens firsthand with the legislature and lawmaking process. The six-week program will give CLS participants the opportunity to gain knowledge about the lawmaking process by listening to presentations from senators as well as representatives.

"The CLS is another wonderful way for constituents to become more familiarized with the legislative process," Hedlund said. "This is an exceptional program that provides citizens with a 'nuts and bolts' style education given firsthand by the very individuals responsible for lawmaking in the Commonwealth."

The Citizens Legislative Seminar will meet from mid-March to mid-April, on Wednesdays from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Specific dates will be announced soon. The seminar is open to any interested citizen. Please contact Senator Hedlund's State House office at (617) 722-1646 by Friday, Jan. 25 for information and applications.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Honoring our fallen heroes

TO THE EDITOR:

So far, US forces have had few deaths in Afghanistan; few enough that the media devote much attention to each individual.

Let us honor also the law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty here in the US; about 300 each year!

Instead of filling our prisons with people guilty of such piddling offenses as possession of marijuana, our criminal justice system should be refocused on providing minimum slack for real criminals, and on precluding harm to victims rather than on the protection of the civil rights of armed and dangerous predators.

Plans for homes on Great Neck opposed

TO THE EDITOR:

Does Cohasset need a few more multi-million dollar homes, or would the community be better served by more open space that all residents could enjoy? This is the question you should consider as you think about the proposed development of land locally known as Great Neck.

Great Neck is bordered by Beach Street, Highland Avenue, the Mohawk tidal estuary and short private ways off Atlantic Avenue and Elm Street. Most of Great Neck is owned by the Cohasset Conservation Trust and is known as Great Brewster Woods. The public can access the walking trails in Great Brewster Woods behind town hall. But the 13.6 acres abutting Great Brewster Woods is in danger of being developed into 3 or 4 multi-million homes. This acreage is beautiful, with dramatic ledge outcroppings, mature trees and vegetation and spectacular vistas of Little Harbor. Because of the unique nature of the site, the proposed development is being reviewed by the Cohasset Conservation Commission this Thursday, Jan. 17, at 9p.m. at town hall.

The tragedy of the proposed development is that very few people are aware of this resource bordering Great Brewster Woods, which is close to being permanently altered. Residents in the area who abut the property have been fighting development of this property for years with the hopes that eventually the town will purchase it and reunite it with the existing conservation land to preserve the "greenbelt" of downtown Cohasset. The town (through the Cohasset Community Preservation Committee) is in a position to make an offer for the property due to: taxes paid by all residents into the Community Preservation Act Fund environmental mitigation funds from the MBTA for the installation of the Greenbush line

I encourage you to attend tonight's Conservation Commission meeting and to speak with members of the zoning and planning boards about the development of Great Neck. But above all, take a walk through the property and ask yourself if the town of Cohasset will be a better place with a few more multi-million dollar homes built on Great Neck.

Mixing music and family life

CONSERVATORY BEAT

ELIZABETH SPENCE

South Shore Conservatory is the largest community performing arts school in Massachusetts and 17th largest nationwide… and it is right here in our own backyard. From time to time Conservatory Beat will comment on aspects of the Conservatory that make it special. This article reviews a recent conversation with SSC parent, Andrea Alvarado whose three sons study piano at South Shore Conservatory.

Andrea and Luis Alvarado were attracted to the charming, relaxed atmosphere of Hingham and its proximity to the ocean when they moved here from Hartford nine years ago. They built their home in Conservatory Park, which appealed to them as a safe, family-oriented neighborhood. They find it a plus to have the Conservatory so nearby that they are able to walk to lessons. They also enjoy hearing the students practice in the warmer months as the tunes drift down from the hill. "The Conservatory is a good neighbor," Andrea says. She is impressed with its importance in the community, noting that many families she knows participate in South Shore Conservatory programs.

Lou and Andrea both play the piano and music is an important part of their family life. Andrea emphatically says, "In our house, if you play hockey, you play the piano." Their three sons, Luis, Bobby and Joseph, play both the piano and hockey. At two years old, Bobby and Joseph were introduced to music when they started in the Conservatory's Music for Mom and Me class. Andrea chose the music class after she read studies indicating the importance of music in helping to develop neuro-pathways in the brain at an early age. She also appreciates that music will add a life-long dimension to their lives.

All the Alvarado boys began studying piano through the Conservatory's Suzuki program which is modeled to teach music to young children using the same method in which children learn to speak their native tongue. Andrea remembers that period with fondness. With three active boys, she felt it was important to set aside individual time with each boy each day. The daily piano practice periods soon became a special time just between mother and son. Memories of holding hands as they chatted and walked up the hill to their lesson are treasured parts of their early years.

Andrea and Lou also value the relationship their boys have developed with their piano teachers who are encouraging and supportive, yet demanding, especially at recital time. Andrea remembers how difficult it is to get up and perform in front of an audience and she is impressed and awed by her boys and the courage it takes to perform in a recital.

When asked about what would improve South Shore Conservatory, Andrea doesn't hesitate to mention the cramped quarters. Mondays are particularly crowded, and she is glad the Conservatory is investigating the possibility of expanding its facility. She knows that the SSC Arts Partners outreach program is expanding but would like to see more demonstrations in public places, like the library, to let more people know about the wonderful programs.

Her son, Luis, recently started guitar lessons through the Arts Partners, at St. Paul's School, one of 11 schools where music is provided by the Conservatory to students who otherwise would not have music in their school setting. Joseph is looking forward to beginning the trumpet soon. Whatever other instruments they pursue, piano will be a constant.

"I'm glad we started the boys in music at such an early age," says Andrea. "It adds that extra dimension to their personalities." Her next challenge? "With five people practicing, we need a new piano."

Elizabeth Spence is an Overseer at South Shore Conservatory. She and her son, Trevor, attend Mom and Me classes on Friday. She may be reached at the Conservatory at 781-749-7565, ext. 23 or through valentine133@hotmail.com SSC is located in Conservatory Park at One Conservatory Drive.

Bradley reflects on his first year

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

State Rep. Garrett Bradley isn't a patient man. He was just 27 when he launched his first campaign to represent the Third Plymouth District, ultimately losing to long-time incumbent Mary Jeanette Murray back in November 1998. The youthful Bradley, who is an attorney, didn't come up through the ranks by first serving locally as a selectman or school committee member, as his predecessor and many of his colleagues had done, before seeking higher office.

"It was a great first year, I learned a lot."

— Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham

Murray, a Cohasset Republican, announced her retirement half way through her 12th term and Bradley campaigned hard again. This time around, he had to fight a tough primary campaign against Michael Holden, a popular Hingham selectman, and then ran against political newcomer Republican Mary Anne McKenna of Hingham and independent Walter Murray of Hull in the state election.

And now at 31 and finishing his first year at the Statehouse, he readily admits the job he so desired can be frustrating at times.

The Hingham Democrat envisioned being able to pass non-controversial bills without delay, but quickly found out that was not the case.

"I was shocked at how many boards needed to approve a bill in order for it to pass," he said. "The bills go back and forth even if there's no opposition to them. It gets a little ridiculous."

But nevertheless, Bradley has tackled his duties with the energy and gusto that were hallmarks of his campaigns during which he literally knocked on every door in Hingham, Cohasset and Hull.

During a recent interview in his cramped office on the fourth floor of the Statehouse, Bradley reflected on his first year in office.

"It was a great first year," he said. "I learned a lot."

Bradley, who will seek reelection next fall in the expanded district that will include a Scituate precinct, said there was no time for freshman jitters because he had to jump right into the job.

"There's such a steep learning curve that it takes a lot of work to keep up," he said.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley

When Bradley, who lives in Hingham with his wife and daughter, served as a Plymouth County assistant district attorney, he saw first-hand people in trouble due to substance abuse, domestic violence, broken homes and lack of employment and educational opportunity.

Although the experience wasn't always representative of the district, his work made him want to make a difference in lives and he felt he could do that by drafting legislation that would help people.

"My job with the DA was reactionary," he said. "I really wanted to be pro-active in my approach and thought I could make a difference as a representative."

He hasn't regretted that decision. The three towns he represents face myriad issues that directly affect their quality of life. Bradley is a critic of the proposed, new Logan runway would add thousands of flights a day overhead; Chapter 40B (affordable housing law) that allows developers to skirt local zoning regulations; and a new issue — the potential delay of School Building Assistance grants that would put an additional burden on the backs on homeowners in Cohasset and Hull. (Hingham is already receiving reimbursement for its school building projects).

Bradley is involved in them all. He also continues to oppose Greenbush and has concerns about its cost, and affect on public safety and pollution. Recently — along with state Sen. Robert Hedlund and members of the anti-train AfTA — he tried to convince fellow legislators Greenbush money could be better spent elsewhere.

Two complicated land swaps in Hingham requiring special legislation came to fruition last session thanks to Bradley and his colleague across the hall, Sen. Hedlund.

"This will enable us to comprehensively develop a jewel on the South Shore," Bradley said about the shipyard legislation that involved an exchange of 25 acres of land among the MBTA, Department of Environmental Management (DEM) and developer SeaChain, LLC. The legislation, which means the plans to redevelop the 155-acre site can move ahead, also improves the commuter boat parking by adding space for 150 more cars.

The Old Ward/Main streets' land swap enabled Blackrock Corporation to pursue its golf course/residential development plan and provided Hingham with valuable open space on historic Main Street.

In relation to Chapter 40B, the so-called "Anti-Snob Zoning Act," Bradley said his biggest challenge was changing the mindset of inner-city representatives.

"I was trying to convince them in the suburbs, it's not used to build affordable housing, it's used as a threat," he said, referring to the fact some developers hold the alternative of high-density housing allowed under Chapter 40B as a cudgel over the heads of town board members to persuade them to OK their projects.

Bradley, who says the demands of the district take a toll on family time, said he routinely starts working in the early hours of the morning and stays busy long past sunset.

"I try to be as available as I possibly can," he said about his constituents.

But the time away from his family is difficult.

"My daughter is asleep when I leave in the morning and when I come home at night. It's tough," he said.

In what little spare time he has, Bradley — a "triple Eagle" meaning he graduated from B.C. High School, Boston College and Boston College Law School — continues to practice law for the Boston law firm Thorton and Naumes in order to put money away for his children's education. (Bradley has another daughter on the way).

His favorite part of being a state representative is when schoolchildren come in for a tour of the Statehouse. He talks with them about the history of the building and the importance of government.

"I remember when I used to come in as a student and Mary Jeanette Murray would talk with us, that made a large impression on me," he said.

While he's not sure if he will be breaking Murray's record for length of time in office, he does hope to represent the district for some time.

Building bridges, fixing highways

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Unlike the death penalty or abortion rights — transportation infrastructure — apart from the Big Dig and Greenbush, may not provide fodder for intense political debate or particular constituent interest, for that matter.

But that's OK with state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, who, at the halfway mark of his fifth term, knows the bricks, mortar and asphalt of his district's bridges and roadways provide a lifeline to the South Shore.

"The Transportation Committee is the most important committee I serve on," the Weymouth Republican said. "Local projects consumed the bulk of my time and probably will in the coming year.

"More non-Central Artery road and bridge projects are underway and funded in my district than any other senatorial district in the state," he said.

Hedlund has the ear of acting Gov. Jane Swift and Massachusetts Highway Commissioner Matthew J Amorello, both of whom were freshmen Republican senators along with Hedlund in his first term back in 1990. In the case of Amorello, that means fighting to get on the list of local projects prioritized by MassHighway.

Serving on the Transportation Committee, Hedlund also tries to get language included that incorporates his district's projects in state bond bills, which finance the projects.

One of the biggest items on the docket is replacing the Fore River Bridge — a $100 million project — half of which is in Weymouth, one of the eight towns in Hedlund's Plymouth-Norfolk senatorial district.

The project, which is ten years in the making, will either involve a new bridge or tunnel.

"A tunnel would open up waterfront land there," said Hedlund, who thinks a tunnel might be popular with commuters. "One of the most frustrating experiences for my constituents is having that bridge up during rush hour." Additional funding will remain a priority so the project can move ahead and be completed in a timely fashion, he said.

"This is the biggest non-Central Artery road and bridge project in the state," he said.

Hingham's $2-1/2 million Route 228 reconstruction project hit a snag when the town sought a waiver on some binding roadway requirements holding up the undertaking. Last fall, Hedlund was able to broker a compromise between MassHighway and the Town of Hingham over certain engineering issues affecting the progress of the 7-1/2 mile project from Queen Ann's Corner to the Cohasset line.

"I got involved and helped work out a compromise between MassHighway and the town allowing the project to go forward," he said. The first segment of the project starting at West Corner (near the Cohasset and Hull lines) is set to start this spring.

Lobbying efforts to get the $2-1/2 million Queen Ann's Corner project — which will likely be adjusted higher now that the design phase is complete — also paid off. Improvements to the intersection shared between Hingham and Norwell that have been talked about for the past 15 years are now set to get underway. The project includes widening Route 53 south to the Grove/High streets intersection including a center-turn lane.

"There was not a lot of momentum behind it, so I and other local legislators took the lead down there to see that through," said Hedlund, who is as comfortable in jeans and hardhat, as a suit and tie.

The senator also worked to get federal and state officials in sync on enhancements at Pemberton Pier at tip of Hull, a $2 million project that also consists of reconstructing, resurfacing and minor widening along 1-1/2 miles of Main and Spring streets.

The state will pick up 100 percent of the cost of replacing the Fitzpatrick Way Bridge in Hull and Sea Street Bridge between Humarock and North Marshfield (renamed the Capt. Frederick Stanley Bridge), said Hedlund, who is also working to get the bridge between Cohasset and Hull, near Strait's Pond, refurbished through a grant.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, left, and MassHighway Commissioner Matthew Amorello look over the decaying underside of the Fore River Bridge. Replacing the bridge with a new bridge or a tunnel will cost about $100 million.

The contract to rebuild the Back River Bridge on Route 3A between Weymouth and Hingham is going out this year.

"The bad news is it will disrupt traffic, but the good news is that is it badly needed," Hedlund said.

Although small in terms of dollar value, Hedlund — an avid cyclist — was able to resolve a long-time pet peeve of his. The so-called "bike path to nowhere" — an expensive bikeway project constructed by MassHighway in Hingham along George Washington Boulevard before Hedlund was in office — ended at the Hull line.

"It dumped you down on George Washington Boulevard with no shoulder," Hedlund said. During a visit, Amorello agreed "it was absurd," Hedlund recalled, and agreed to have MassHighway pave the 1,685 foot unpaved portion from the Hingham/Hull line at a cost of about $30,000. The project was completed in September.

In the spring, the district will also see the resurfacing of a section of Route 3A in Cohasset, the entire length of 3A in Hingham, and Summer Street in Hingham to the Hull line.

Hedlund is also pushing to see Route 18 improved in Weymouth. "Route 18 is an absolute priority with me," he said. And in Marshfield, he worked along with Rep. Frank Hynes and local residents to have MassHighway issue a temporary truck ban on Union Street. Hedlund, who brought Amorello down to view the Union Street Bridge and area, thinks when data is assessed it could result in a permanent truck ban.

Traveling on terra firma is not the only focus for Hedlund, who has always been an advocate of commuter boats. Last week he met with Harbor Express — the Quincy-based catamaran service — and state officials to try to work out a plan that makes sense and will pass legal muster to ensure the service stays in business.

"We're moving in the right direction and I want to see the service continue and flourish," he said. "There's a huge untapped potential for commuter boat service to Long Wharf from that site."

Hedlund also recently announced improvements to the Hingham commuter boat at Hewitt's Cove including widening the gangway and providing a covered walkway.

Although he opposes restoration of the Greenbush railroad line, Hedlund continues to work with the affected towns, specifically Weymouth and Scituate, on their mitigation agreements with the MBTA.

"My involvement from town to town depends on the issue and how much assistance the town requests of me," he said. As an example, Hedlund helped Cohasset eke an additional $1 million in its agreement and was personally involved in suggesting that a cut and cover tunnel option at Weymouth Landing could work. He invited Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan down to take a look — a visit that resulted in putting the tunnel, which will eliminate a grade crossing on Quincy Avenue — on the table.

In Hull, the Bernie King Pavilion will be rebuilt and Nantasket Beach, the busiest public beach in the state, will see $10 million in improvements that include beach restoration and replacing the seawall.

"Over the past three years, $13 million has been either funded or is about to be funded for seawall repairs in the senatorial district," Hedlund said. The district incorporates Weymouth, Hingham, Scituate, Hull, Cohasset, Marshfield, Duxbury and part of Braintree. Next year the district loses Braintree and gains Norwell.

Hedlund is also proud of his efforts in getting the buildings at a former military facility, Hingham Annex, abated and the area cleaned up so the site can become part of Wompatuck State Park.

Looking forward, Hedlund plans to be at the forefront of securing School Building Assistance funding which the Department of Education plans to slash that will directly impact taxpayers and he also wants to make sure there is no cut in library building grants. He also is working to get more local control over affordable housing and the siting of cell towers.

More money, a lot less value

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

When I was young and ice covered most of the earth, one of the more popular radio programs was "The $64 Question," a quiz show in which contestants were called upon to answer a series of questions with the winner getting $64 for his trouble.

That was considered pretty good when you recall that sirloin steak was selling for 25 cents a pound, two cans of Franco American spaghetti went for 15 cents, and the Business Man's Lunch at HoJo's cost you 35 cents, plus tip.

We, the listeners, couldn't wait to see the next lucky guy pocket his check for $64 and, possibly under police escort, strike out for the nearest bank to put down a deposit on a new house, a new car, or a college education for the kids.

Right now, as I understand it, Regis Philbin is trying to give away a million dollars on television, and the program is going into the tank because viewers are getting bored watching contestants win what has become little more than parking meter change.

What has happened to our sense of value in the years since FDR, that great juggler of economic verities, performed his magic from the Oval Office?

I asked myself that question the other day when I learned that Charlie Dolan had managed to scrape together another $40 million to add to his original bid of $400 million to win the affections, not to mention the ownership, of Our Old Towne Team, the Red Sox.

This tops the $400 million bid by the previous winners, John Henry and his gang, but falls short of the $490 million bid by Miles Prentice, which was rejected because . . . What the heck? What's another $90 million or so among friends?

The same issue of the Globe reminded me of the problems facing Enron, the once powerful energy company that is seeking bankruptcy after losing $618 million during the third quarter of 2001 alone, roughly one/tenth the gross national product of the Republic of Georgia and its five million people.

I can recall when Louise Day Hicks (remember her?), during one of her many campaigns for public office, promised the Boston police that if she were elected, they would soon make $10,000 a year, or she would know the reason why.

I don't know how much Louise had to do with it, but now a Boston cop starts at three times that much, and with overtime and special details added, some of them pay taxes on or near $100,000 a year.

I can also recall covering a 1948 strike of Eastern Mass Street Railway Co. (remember them?) bus drivers, who were seeking a 40 hour work week and a 20 cent an hour raise. They were working 48 hours for $66.82 a week. The company offered a five cent raise.

Did I ever tell you about the time we used to thumb our way to Quincy to watch a Saturday matinee of Tom Mix or Hoot Gibson movies, plus a serial, a cartoon, and various short subjects from the balcony of the State Theater — all for the price of 10 cents?

Ah, them was the days . . .

Wellspring says thanks for support from your thoughtfulness that we would be "preaching to the choir" if we were to tell you what your kindness meant to the children and most especially, to the parents.

Your generous help and support of our Wellspring Holiday program provided more than 65 families, including 150 children, with gifts. The most oft repeated reaction was, "Wow, all this for me?" or "I can't believe this!" The first mother to pick up her family's gifts burst into tears and said, "This will be my children's best Christmas ever."

One of our donors said, "I remember hard Christmases and there was no Wellspring — God bless you." Another anonymous donor came in and said his name was 'Ben There' and now I have enough to share." What a wonderful end to 2001!

We sincerely hope that you had a Happy Holiday Season and we wish you a Happy and Healthy New Year. And please know that you were truly the "wellspring" of much holiday happiness.

POLITICAL NOTES

Democrats to hold caucus in Cohasset

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will be holding a caucus at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave. on Saturday, Feb. 2 at 10 a.m. to elect five delegates and five alternates to the 2002 Massachusetts Democratic Convention to be held on Friday, May 31 and Saturday, June 1 at the Worcester Centrum in Worcester.

The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Cohasset. All candidates may make a two-minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots will be written and secret. All candidates must be present at the caucus to be elected and must consent to nomination in writing. Those not elected as delegate or alternate may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 10 Granite Street, Quincy, MA 02169 no later than ten days after the caucus date.

For more information, please contact Agnes McCann, chairman of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee (781) 383-0222 or the Democratic State Committee at (617) 472-0637.

Tolman makes local stop

Warren Tolman, a candidate for governor, was the Democratic nominee for Lt. Governor, has served as a state senator and state representative from 1991 to 1999. He lives in Watertown, where he was raised, with his wife Carolyn and three children.

In the legislature, Tolman was a strong supporter of early childhood education, an advocate of campaign finance reform, he fought against the tobacco industry, and served as a watchdog of the MWRA and other agencies. He currently teaches at Boston College Law School.

Tolman will be in Cohasset on Saturday, Jan. 19 from 12-2 p.m. at the home of Margy Charles, 85 Linden Drive. The public is invited. This reception is not a fund-raiser, but an opportunity to understand what a citizen's campaign is all about.

For information, call Margy Charles at 781-383-0916.

David Walsh, who owns one of the three parcels and who said he is in litigation with Morrissey over a contract to buy the other two, was a little more accommodating.

"No one's made me an offer," he said. "Just tell them to write the check and we'll be there."

But just how much the dollar amount on that check would be remains an open question; the Great Neck group's estimates place the value at $1.2 million.

And if the landowners weren't willing to sell — an "unfriendly" eminent domain land taking could be the route to take — a move that could also involve litigation.

The land trust has already pledged $100,000 toward the effort to acquire the property and the Great Neck group hopes others, including the town, will also donate generously.

To that end, members of group made a presentation before the first meeting last week of the Community Preservation Committee, formed under the auspices of the Community Preservation Act, which the town adopted last year. They hope the CPC will look favorably on the proposal and recommend to Town Meeting that preservation funds be used to buy the property.

Sensitive to the potentially imminent threat of development, the CPC agreed to hear the group's proposal and has taken the matter under advisement until its Feb. 11 meeting.

"There's no question it's a lovely, unique piece of property," said CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey, who has walked the site. "It's a forested area near the downtown area."

"We want the town to be aware what they stand to lose if it's allowed to be developed."

— Lynne DeGiacomo, Beach Street

Under state law, the CPC must dedicate at least 10 percent of preservation funds toward affordable housing, 10 percent toward historic preservation and 10 percent toward the acquisition of open space. The money comes from a 1.5 percent surcharge on local property taxes. The state also provides matching funds.

"We don't want to spend all our money now before we've gone out and educated ourselves on what projects to spend the money on," Ivimey said. The CPC plans to conduct a public forum later this winter or early spring to solicit ideas from townspeople.

But Ivimey, who suggested the group vigorously pursue alternative funding to bring the price down for the town, didn't rule out the CPC putting a "yes" on the proposal.

Lynne DeGiacomo, a member of the Great Neck group, said it's important to get the word out about the potential of the property.

"We want the town to be aware what they stand to lose if it's allowed to be developed," she said.

John Hartshorne of the Cohasset Land Conservation Trust (owner of 18 parcels of land in town) said the $100,000 from the trust and other private donations could cover the debt service on a loan for the land for at least a year. That would provide time for the town to build funds in the Community Preservation Account. State rules allow communities to secure mortgage payments for land acquisition against anticipated revenues of the community preservation fund.

Great Neck is the same group lobbying for a bylaw amendment that would protect ledge over a certain height from being altered without first obtaining a variance from the Zoning Board of Appeals.

Third quarter tax bills issued

The Town of Cohasset has issued the Fiscal Year 2002 third quarter tax bills due Feb. 1. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the Board of Assessors at 781-383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

The fiscal 2002 total tax is based on the new fiscal 2002 assessment. The new assessments are based on sales market activity during calendar 2000 and early 2001 to reflect the value of real estate as of Jan. 1, 2001.

Tax payers who feel that their property is over assessed and want to contest their assessment must file for and abatement with the Board of Assessors by 1 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 1.

Real Estate tax exemptions are available to qualifying elderly, widows, blind persons, and veterans with a 10 percent service connected disability or greater.

The sewer betterments for both the north (NSWR) and central (CSWR) sewer projects are included on this bill. The total amount of the apportioned sewer betterment to be paid during this fiscal year is shown on the tax bill under the "special assessment" section. The amount due also includes accrued 1 percent interest on the unpaid principal betterment balance. The total amount due is split between the third and fourth quarter payments. The amount due is included in the total due Feb. 1, line show at the bottom right of tax bill.

The tax bill also contains the Community Preservation Act (CPA) 1.5 percent surcharge. The total CPA surcharge due for the full fiscal year is shown next to the Community Preservation Act line on the tax bill. The surcharge is calculated as follows: FY2002 Assessment - $100,000 (residential exemption) x $11.48 (tax rate)/1000 = gross taxes subject to surcharge. Gross taxes subject to surcharge - FY2002 exemptions approved by assessors, if applicable = net taxes subject to surcharge. - Net taxes subject to surcharge x .015 (1.5 percent CPA surcharge) = Total CPA surcharge. Total FY2002 CPA surcharge - Preliminary surcharge/2 = surcharge Feb. 1, and May 1. The amount due is included in the total due Feb. 1, line shown at the bottom right of tax bill. There are exemptions for qualified low income and elderly property owner. Contact the board of assessors at 781-383-4114 for details.

Finally, enclosed with the tax bills is an insert that allows taxpayers to make voluntary contributions to the scholarship, education and elderly/disabled funds established a few years ago.

Scholarship fund will provide secondary school tuition assistance to deserving town residents. these funds will be in addition to scholarships currently available to the town residents.

Educational fund will provide supplemental educational funding for the Cohasset Public Schools. Additionally, funds may be used for existing adult literacy programs.

Elderly disabled fund will provide property tax relief for elderly and disabled Cohasset taxpayers who meet specific criteria established by the elderly/disabled fund committee.

Awards for the above funds will be made once there are sufficient funds available.

What the Great Neck Preservation Group would like to see. Public hiking trails throughout Great Neck, which would be joined with Great Brewster Woods.

New group wants voice in harbor improvements

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Attendees at tonight's workshop on the proposed harbor streetscape and infrastructure improvements will include a new group, dubbed "Friends of Cohasset Harbor."

The citizens' group initiated by Border Street neighbors Dick Karoff and Sam Knox has concerns about the future "look" of the harbor as well as public access and sidewalk maintenance. Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private entity working with the town's village task force, is sponsoring the workshop at 7:30 at St. Anthony's Parish Hall..

The Cecil Group, hired by CRC which is backed by businessman and property owner Peter Roy of Margin Street, will present ideas to improve pedestrian and bicycle accessibility and linkage to public access points ant the waterfront, according to CRC executive director Dean Rizzo. Discussion items include sidewalk and railing designs, defined parking lanes and lighting.

"Cohasset is stone and wood and not wrought-iron fencing and fancy lighting."
— Dick Karoff, Border Street

Karoff said he and Knox sent letters out to about 300 residents and received a "substantial" response.

The group's three major concerns include:

- The "tone" of the harbor in that the area should be enhanced with wood and stone rather than wrought iron and fancy lighting.
- Parking accommodation that allows townspeople access to the harbor
- That any new sidewalks and other improvements be maintained

Karoff mentioned, for example, that pavers would be a better choice for sidewalks than brick. Pavers are larger and made of a rougher texture, he said.

Karoff praised Roy's interest in the harbor.

"We second and endorse the fact someone is interested in the harbor," he said. "But at the same time Cohasset is stone and wood and not wrought-iron fencing and fancy lighting."

Rizzo said he welcomes the feedback and thinks active community groups are a plus..

"If there's an active group invested in protecting the integrity of the harbor – that falls right in line with the thoughts and feelings of the CRC," he said.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Citizens' petitions

Selectmen approved six citizens' petitions to the warrant for Town Meeting Tuesday. In order for a citizens' petition to be incorporated into the warrant, the proponents must garner 10 signatures for the article.

The six articles are:

- A ledge preservation article.
- An act to establish a special election in the town of Cohasset pertaining to certain financial matters.
- An act to establish a local binding initiative petition process in the town of Cohasset
- An article asking for an appropriation of $30,000 to join a coalition of towns to try and stop proposed Logan runway 14/32.
- An article asking for a sum of money for the purpose of retaining engineers to develop a cost estimate and construction drawings to reconstruct the sidewalk along Beechwood Street from South Main Street up Norman Todd Road and continuing with a new sidewalk to meet the existing sidewalk at #131 Beechwood Street.
- The last article would be an amendment to the zoning by-law relating to district boundary lines.

Historic commission

After receiving calls from concerned residents, selectmen decided to delay the appointments of Charles and Michelle Furtado to the Common Historic District Commission. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he received numerous complaints from residents who thought having a husband and wife on the same board was not a great idea.

After hearing the complaints, Michelle decided to not accept her appointment but selectmen wanted to review Charles' appointment as well.

Victualer license

At the selectmen's meeting Tuesday, Robert Gould of Grapevine Caterer's was awarded a common victualer's license for his business at 3 Stage Coach Way. The business will be a cafe open from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. seven days a week. The inside of the restaurant will sit 10 people and there will be seating for 30 outside from May through October.

A victualer license is a food license.

Town election activity picks up

It was a week for incumbents to pull papers.

Six residents pulled nomination papers in the last week indicating they will be seeking re-election on their chosen board.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Fred Koed plan to run again for their seats on the Board of Selectmen.

The last day to pick up the papers is Feb.14 and all papers need to be returned by Feb. 19.

Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees Sheila Evans and Roger Whitley are looking to serve another term.

Ralph Perroncello, 10 Pleasant St., hopes to keep his seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority and, Town Moderator George Marlette pulled papers for another term.

Two candidates are officially on the ballot after collecting the required 50 signatures from residents. Mary Granville and Roger Lowe are the first two citizens to be place on the ballot. Granville is seeking a seat on the Board of Assessors while Lowe is looking to retain his position as a Paul Pratt Memorial Library trustee.

The last day to pick up the papers is Feb.14 and all papers need to be returned by Feb. 19. To be put on the ballot, a candidate must garner 50 signatures from registered voters. Annual Town Election will be on April 6.

S. S. Vo-Tech gets high marks cent, it concentrates more on trades. The school offers 14 specialty areas. The areas include auto body work, automotive work, carpentry, cosmetology, culinary arts, drafting, electronics, graphic arts, health careers, heating and air conditioning, industrial electronics, industrial technology machine shop, and metal fabrication.

The students do not just get a brief synopsis of their specialty area, they are immersed in it. Over the four years, they will spend 1500 hours in a shop along with their regular studies. The school has a working auto body shop, restaurant, beauty salon and welding shop to name a few of the working classrooms.

Students spend six days in an academic setting followed by six days in the shop. Even with the diminished time spent in a classroom, the students are required to pass the MCAS test.

Upon graduation, students not only have a high school diploma but posses a technical performance certificate which attests to competency in a chosen area.

"We have become a more service-oriented society, and there is not a better way to get into the industry than a VoTech school," Malvey said. "Many will have jobs waiting for them after they graduate high school, not many people can say that."

So why is there an apprehension of Cohasset youths to attend the school?

"Cohasset is such a closely knit town that students do not see a lot of reasons to leave their friends and enter a new school," said junior Justin Drybanski, of Cohasset.

Christine Portanova, mother of Vo-Tech freshman Elyse Portanova, thinks the parents of Cohasset students do not realize what Vo-Tech is about.

"Cohasset Middle/High School is great academically, but if your kids are interested in something different, Cohasset has nothing to offer," she said.

To get an idea in what they are interested in, students spend their first three months at Vo-Tech in an exploratory program. In the program, the teens choose six areas and spend the days getting to know each of those specialties. At the end of the time, they apply to their favorite one.

Kristen James, Justin Drybanski and Elyse Portanova are three of just seven Cohasset students enrolled at South Shore Vocational Technical High School in Hanover.

Drybanski, whose specialty is electronics, attended ninth-grade at Cohasset before deciding he wanted something else. His family is in the electronics business and he felt Vo-Tech would provide him an excellent avenue toward that profession. He says making the change to Vo-Tech was "the best thing I ever did," but admits it may not be for everyone.

Sophomore Kristen James, 19 Buttonwood Lane, says she is glad few students from Cohasset try Vo-Tech.

"I didn't like the Cohasset schools and didn't like most of the people," she said. "The people at this school are so much more grounded. I don't think a lot of kids from Cohasset would fit in."

Supt. Kosko said the school prides itself on conveying the importance of being level headed and responsible to its students.

"Part of the mission of the school is to prepare our students for the real world," he said. While the students do become highly educated in their trade, they are also schooled in English, social studies, math and science.

James, who made high honors this semester specializing in electronics, said the perception of the school as lacking academic credentials is unfounded.

"People say this is a school for slow students but we have to take the MCAS and pass them just like anyone else and we only have half the time to study for them," she said.

Freshman Elyse Portanova, 50 Elm Court, thinks the school deserves a better reputation.

"Kids used to tease me about the school," she said. "But they don't understand what we do here, it's very competitive."

Portanova, who made honors in electronics, said she feels the Cohasset public schools were just not for her.

"I wouldn't be able to sit through nine hours of classes everyday," she said. "I love working hands on in something I like to do."

All three students lauded the efforts of their teachers and said their energy and support is contagious.

"There are a lot of people who want you to succeed here," Drybanski said.

The three said they felt the teachers in Cohasset schools had a laissez faire approach which did not coincide with their styles of learning.

"I like the way we are presented with the material here," Portanova said. "It's not just here's a book, now read it."

The town of Cohasset pays for the students to attend Vo-Tech, it does not come out of the school budget. Haddad said the town spent $56,000 last year for students to attend the school.

Sewer Commission is jumping to conclusions.

"We need to slow down and get a consensus for the plans," Joe Coggins, 57 Elm St. said. Coggins said the abutters must all meet and agree upon what changes are most important before any design plans are approved. He said while some have discussed the plans, it is necessary for all who are affected be consulted.

Howie Altholz, de facto head of the citizens' group, said there has been progress made but there is still a ways to go. "We are moving ahead very warily," he said. "Words are no longer satisfactory, we need to see results."

Selectman Michael Sullivan agreed the plans should not move ahead too quickly. He said that when the plant was built it was done rapidly and without any input from the residents and these mistakes should not be made twice.

"This has to be well thought out," Sullivan said.

Another concern brought up by Selectman Merle Brown was the lack of trust some have for Tutela Engineers, the engineering company that designed the plant.

"We need to get a different engineering company for the redesign work because Tutela has no idea what they are doing," Brown said. He said if Tutela had built the plant as it said it was going to, in the motif of an old country barn, none of this would have been necessary.

While there has not been a cost estimate done on the plans, residents feel a majority of the work could be done with the $150,000 currently in the budget. Selectmen decided to put a "place-saver" article on the warrant which would allow the project more funds if necessary. The article would be worded in a way to keep the additional appropriation under $100,000.

"We are going to come up with a nice, cost-effective solution which will provide the necessary aesthetics for the abutters," Vanderweil said.

The situation started in the winter of 1999 when the sewer plant was constructed. The plant, which is in the marsh off Elm Street, can be seen from St. Anthony's Church, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and dozens of private homes.

The old plant consisted of some outside tanks and smaller structures, which were lower and therefore less visible to the neighbors. But the new state-of-the-art sewer treatment system needed to be enclosed to protect the equipment, which has been able to increase four-fold the amount of wastewater treated and provide better treatment than the old plant.

Residents were promised the plant would be compatible with the site and the environment, however, many feel they were misled. The abutters wanted a say in the look of the plant but were never consulted.

"We were supposed to have a nice country barn out there but we don't," said Coggins. "They just threw up the cheapest, biggest building they could."

Coggins said he is embarrassed to entertain guests on his back porch which looks directly at the plant. He described the view as looking at "a whole lot of ugliness."

Altholz is not pleased with how the process has evolved. "Once is was built, everyone was shocked," he said. "We were never involved at all."

Altholz wished none of this was necessary.

"We're just a group of average citizens," he said. "But we know if we didn't make a lot of noise about this it would never get done."

However, Altholz said the residents are still working cooperatively with the Sewer Commission.

Residents will continue to meet with local architect Keith Moskow on new drawings. The Sewer Commission and the residents' group will communicate on their progress and once the plans become a reality it will be brought before the selectmen for review.

Penalties do in Cohasset skaters in 3-3 tie

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Norwell and Cohasset High hockey teams played to a 3-3 tie on Saturday night in a much anticipated showdown of apparent South Shore League contenders. Both of the team's coaches thought the performances of their respective teams was something they'd be able to build around, though the reasons for these beliefs could not possibly have been more divergent.

Norwell coach Paul Hurley was ecstatic after watching his team erase a two goal deficit in the third period to salvage a tie and get to 2-4-2 on the season, effusing afterwards: "this showed what these guys can do when they set their minds to it and work hard."

Cohasset benchwalker Denis Walsh was rankled by the collapse that blemished his team's perfect 5-0 slate, declaring: "We didn't take this game as seriously as we should have. Norwell's a solid team and they surprised us a little. This showed us we can't let down."

Regardless of which coach speaks the greater truth, one thing is clear: this game did not follow the script envisioned by most close observers. Many close to the SSL hockey scene felt the talented but thin on top Clippers might be able to stay with the deeper Cohasset squad for a period or two, but that the Skippers would eventually wear them down.

What transpired was just the opposite. Trailing 3-1 in the third period, Norwell—aided by a host of Cohasset penalties— scored the final two goals of the contest to pull out the tie.

Cohasset committed the last four penalties of the game, but they all occurred in their own defensive end, as Norwell pushed their advantage repeatedly.

Norwell captain Rob Himberg cut his team's deficit in half 4:05 into the third when he won the race to the rebound of a Matt Greenburg shot, spinning and firing in one smooth motion before Cohasset goalie Dan Kinchla could recover, the puck deflecting off his shoulder and into the top left corner of the net. The put-back opportunity was set up by a nice rush by Norwell's other captain, senior defenseman Ben Spitz, who dished to Greenburg for the one-timer.

"We didn't take this game as seriously as we should have. Norwell's a solid team and they surprised us a little. This showed us we can't let down."

Cohasset hockey coach Dennis Walsh

Spitz, who also scored the game's first goal three minutes in, set up the equalizer in similar fashion a little over two minutes later. With Norwell on the power play, the smooth skating blue-liner again carried hard into the Skippers zone to draw in the defense, then feeding to Mike McAteer near the right circle. McAteer then quickly slid a pass in front to "power forward" Brendan McDonald, who fended off the heavy checking of a Cohasset defensemen long enough to get his stick on the ice and re-direct the pass through the pads of Kinchla.

The final eight minutes were played at a tourney-level pitch, with both teams crashing the net and going all out in search for the gamewinner that would never come.

Norwell barely missed on a handful of opportunities on the power play, the best chances an attempted wraparound by Himberg that Kinchla just managed to get a skate on, and a beautiful feed by Spitz from the left point to the right post to Curt Alpert, who was checked off by Cohasset defenseman Eric Libby at the last second to bail out Kinchla.

The Skippers— who outshot Norwell, 24-15—had the better opportunities in the final minutes. Team leading scorer Tom Anderson made brilliant rush near the two minute mark, gaining a step on his

Back-to-back losses drops Scituate-Cohasset squad under .500

It was a simple case of bad timing: the Scituate-Cohasset swim team ran into two of the toughest opponents on the schedule in a span of three days.

The SciCohs found themselves on the losing end of both meets, running their record to 2-3-1. Spirits have remained high, though, as second year coach Jamie Kearney continues to be pleased with the effort her team puts forth.

"The kids are always improving, always lowering their times every week," began the coach, and former state record-holding swimmer. "What more can I ask for from these guys?"

Last Wednesday, the Skipper-Sailors took on Taunton in the Taunton Boys and Girls club, with the hosts prevailing, 49-40. The low score was a result of the four-lane configuration of the pool, but Taunton did stop adding on points to their score when the lead became insurmountable.

Taunton set the tone early, opening the meet with a 1-2 finish in the 200 medley relay. The hosts also took the top two spots in the next two events for a big cushion going into the

A banner day for the Baroudi brothers

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset wrestlers took one of three against much larger schools at a quad-meet on Friday at New Bedford, topping Holliston, 42-36, but falling to powerhouse Duxbury, 67-12, and the host Whalers, 40-30.

Not surprisingly, Duxbury (now 12-0) swept all three of its matches in lopsided fashion.

The only triple winner of the day for Cohasset was freshman Matt Baroudi, who bumped up from his usual 189-pound weight class to wrestle impressively at 215. The frosh earned six key points with a pin in the Holliston match, and also notched half of the Skippers' total in the Duxbury match with a pin.

Junior Dave Kupsc earned the Clippers other six points in the Duxbury match with a pin at 103.

It turned out to be a banner day for the Baroudi family, as junior Terry beat his Holliston counterpart at 135, a top 10 ranked Massachusetts wrestler.

"Terry's really coming on," said veteran Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney of the elder Baroudi, who advanced out of the Sectionals a year ago but could not compete at State's because of a shoulder injury. "I think Terry might be ready to take that next step up into the rankings. He's close."

Andrade and Maitland key vital win for boys over Holbrook

By Mike Spellman

Numbers: there's no way of escaping them in the world of sports, and basketball is certainly no exception.

Cohasset boys basketball coach Ron Ford finds it easy these days, however, to look through the thick haze of stats and figures. Indeed, there is only one number in which he's interested: -2.

That numeral represents Ford's Skippers' chase for a state tourney berth. With their record standing at 4-6, the C.H.S. hoopsters reached the midway of their season this weekend two games under the magic .500 mark needed for post-season qualification. This leaves the veteran coach and his charges eyeing another figure, "6", the number of wins needed over the remaining 10 games to sneak in to the Div. 4 state s tournament.

Any more than four losses the rest of the way and the Skippers are out. If they are to make the tourney, the boys will have to do a better job in second go-rounds with their South Shore League competition, their league slate standing at 0-5 after Friday's 64-41 loss to Carver. This followed lopsided losses to league rivals Abington, Norton, Mashpee and Norwell.

"We've got our work cut out for us," conceded Ford. " We can't afford to give away too many winnable games from this point on."

The Carver loss capped a brutal 0-4 stretch for the Skippers that left Ford feeling a shakeup was in order for Saturday's important non-league showdown with Holbrook—one of only 11 fellow Div. 4 teams on their 20 game schedule. Scrappy sophomore guard John Andrade was inserted into the starting lineup—a move the veteran coach felt made a vital difference in the 62-49 win.

"John set a real aggressive tone with his scrappy play," said Ford. "He was diving all over the place for loose balls and really providing a lot of energy."

Andrade got the Skippers off to a nice start when he put the game's first three points on the board with a bomb from behind the arc. The sophomore finished the game with 10 points and four steals.

Rough weekend for lady hoopsters

Losses to Carver and Scituate drop C.H.S. girls to 3-8

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Last weekend, the girls basketball team lost two games that they are going to have to forget if they want to turn their season around.

"We want to see if we can get things going in the other direction," asserted third year coach Ellen Carr.

On Friday, Cohasset was outmatched and outplayed, getting lit up by an outstanding Carver squad, 53-28.

Carver has put together a very quick, pressing team, one seemingly with enough talent to contend with Abington and Norwell for the South Shore League crown.

Their quickness on the fullcourt defense proved too much for Cohasset, as they jumped out to an early lead and never looked back.

The Lady Skippers tried everything they could to beat the Crusaders up the floor, rotating four point guards in (juniors LaRaine Langford, Heather Peraino and Lindsay Grossman, and sophomore Jen Buckley).

Carver's Meaghan Jesse led her team with 18 points, continuing her spot as one of the most dangerous offensive threats in the league.

Peraino led the way for Cohasset, collecting 11 points. With very solid efforts in the past two weeks, she appears to be back to full strength after missing the first four games of the season due to injury.

The more difficult to bare of the two losses came last Saturday when Cohasset was downed in Scituate, 46-39. Cohasset had gotten the better of their neighboring rivals in December, 57-45, but the Lady Sailors made some key adjustments to ready themselves for the rematch.

"I think Scituate was well prepared defensively," offered Carr, noting that Scituate was one of the few teams Cohasset has faced that primarily runs man-to-man. "It did frustrate us. The girls weren't able to execute."

Cohasset was shut down in similar fashion by Carve. Scituate's pressure on the ball flustered the Lady Blue. In the eyes of their coach, nothing seemed to go as it usually does on the offensive end.

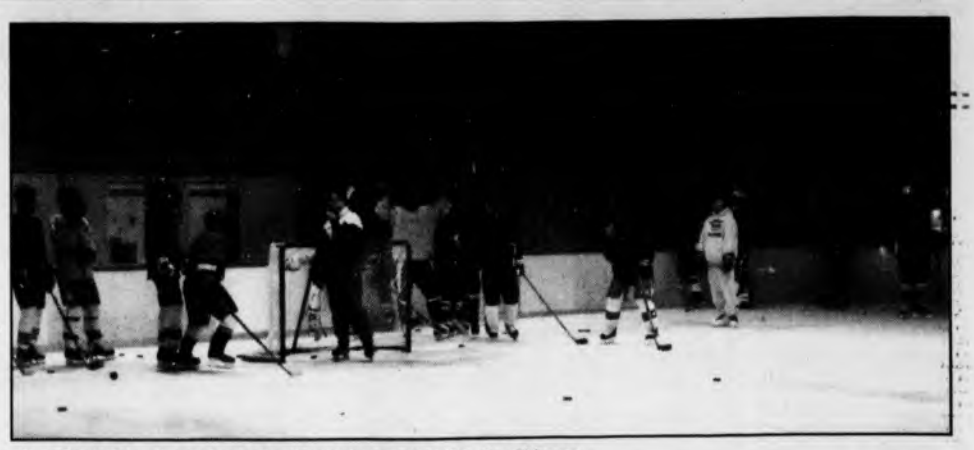
"We did not play together as well as we could have," Carr asserted.

"Everyone worked hard, but we were not able to click."

Carr also mentioned that to return her charges back to the winning track, they will need to bring their scoring totals back up into at least the 40s.

Junior Maura O'Brien, who torched the Lady Sailors for 22 points last time, found herself pinned under constant double teams, and was unable to form a threat.

Grossman did her best to pick up the slack, coming through with 12 points. She is now averaging a team best 14.7 points per game this year.



Greg Scott (standing in front of net) explains a new drill to the Skippers.

Skippers attend customized hockey clinic

On a Saturday evening, the Cohasset Varsity and Junior Varsity Hockey Teams participated in a rigorous two-hour hockey clinic. The clinic, sponsored by the Cohasset Hockey Boosters, was customized for the team through discussions between head coach Dennis Walsh and the clinic lead coach, Greg Scott.

Scott, an New England College Development League (NECDL) skills instructor and coach since 1991, is also a coach for the NECDL All-Star travel team. This team is comprised of top players in the New England College Development League and competes against teams from the area's Independent School and Prep School Leagues in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. Scott graduated from Concordia College in Minnesota.

To insure that the Skippers received plenty of attention, Scott brought two additional coaches to assist with the clinic. Dan Scott, a NECDL skills instructor and coach as well as head ice hockey coach at Derby Academy, played junior hockey for the Bridgewater Bandits of the EJHL. NECDL goalie coach Tom Welby was on the ice to work specifically with senior goalie Dan Kinchla and freshman goalie Brendan Michaud. Welby played goal for Thayer Academy in Braintree, the Nipawin Hawks of the Saskatchewan Junior Hockey League and Merrimack College in Hockey East, graduating earlier this year from Merrimack.

After talking with the Skippers' head coach Dennis Walsh, Scott set goals for the clinic. "First," said Scott, "we wanted to challenge the team with some drills they have not seen before. Every coach expects their team to be conditioned, but if you design and run drills with game speed in mind and keep the drills jumping from one to another, there is no true need for conditioning drills, because they are inherently built in. This gives coaches more time to work with their team on systems and, the plus is, that the players do not really notice that they are sprinting and moving every second because they are in the midst of shooting, passing, back-checking or are involved in a 2 on 1"

"I also wanted to stress shooting and passing in stride with the group. I wanted to make it clear to the team that practicing passing and shooting while moving their feet will improve their game greatly by improving their ability to shoot, pass and think at game speed" continued Scott.

While enjoying pizza with the team at the end of the clinic, Scott said he "thought the clinic went very well. From what I saw they looked like they got their money's worth although, everyone looked a bit tired at the end!"

Coach Dennis Walsh agreed that the clinic went very well. "I think the boys paid attention, worked hard and got a lot out of the drills," said Walsh. "Every minute on the ice continues the development we've been working on for a number of years. Being on the ice with a new individual introduces the players to new drills and new perspectives."

Scott's overall impression? "The Cohasset team is a great group of kids. My staff and I had a lot of fun working with them. They have some really good young hockey players and they have the potential to be a very strong team this season ... we'll be keeping an eye on the paper to see how the season is going!"

they could get against Holliston, so additional pins by Vinnie Gratta (112 pounds), Bill Carbone (130), John Hussey (heavyweight) and the Casey brothers, Matt (140 pounds) and Mike (171), all proved huge. Sweeney was particularly impressed by Mike's decisive win over a quality opponent.

A solid win on points by Phil Strazzula at 125 also provided a crucial six point swing.

Carbone and Matt Casey were the only other multiple winners on the day. Both of these freshman recorded pins against New Bedford, as did their fellow froshes Matt Baroudi and Joe Kehoe (119). Sophomore Ian Kidder also notched a pin in this match.

Obviously, Sweeney is excited about the future of his program.

"We've got a lot of first year wrestlers who have really stepped up this season," said the 13th year coach. "It's exciting to look ahead at the possibilities."

The Cohasset team is now 5-9 overall, but 2-0 in the Pilgrim Conference 2. Eyeing individual success in the state tourneys, Sweeney generally puts together one of the most challenging non-league schedules in the area, and this year has certainly been no exception.

"If you want to do well in the state's, you've got to let your kids wrestle the best talent possible," he explained earlier in the season.

Since his team's disappointing performance at Marshfield High's annual Holiday Tourney last month, Sweeney says he has noticed a "hungrier" approach from his grapplers.

"I'm happy with the way we've been wrestling over the last few weeks," he continued. "We're 2 and 2 in our last four matches, and we've had a lot of guys really step up their performance."

The Skippers were scheduled to face league rival Hull on the road last night, and to host their annual wrestling tourney on Saturday. The matches start at 10:30 a.m. in the Cohasset High gym, with finals scheduled for 5:30 p.m..

Wrestling Notes

The Skippers took a lopsided 63-10 win over Pilgrim Conference rival Hanover last Friday. Cohasset notched 11 wins, including eight pins, in the lopsided affair.

The pins were slapped on by Jonathan Littauer (103 pounds), Kupsc (112), Terry Baroudi (135), Matt Casey (140), Ian Hickey (145), Chris McKenna (152), Mike Casey (171) and Cosimo Cambi (189). Wins on points were delivered by Strazzulla (125) Carbone (130) and Hussey (215).

Cohasset scorers with 17 points, all of these coming in the second half, while Ben Lynner chipped in with 12 and Matt Bilodeau with 10.

Defending SSL champion Carver seized control of Friday's game quickly, which prompted Ford to say later of the first half "that was easily our worst half of the year." He was encouraged by the way his club hung in for the second half , though—something he felt provided a nice mental lift the following night.

"I thought we played a pretty strong second half against Carver on Friday, and we were able to carry that over somewhat into the Holbrook game." said Ford. "That (Holbrook) win was one we had to have, and the guys came out and played a very strong game."

The Skippers travel to Harwich Friday night (6:30 start) for another SSL tilt. They'll then spend that night in a local hotel, and catch a ferry for Nantucket the next morning for a 1 p.m. game against a rebuilding but reportedly much improved Whalers team. The Skippers next game after that will be Monday at Hull.

Cohasset shares the bottom of the SSL standings with Harwich and Hull, so all three of these upcoming games appear to be winnable for the Skippers.

Following this calm in the storm, the Skippers repeat the aforementioned brutal stretch against SSL rivals Norwell, Mashpee, Norton, Abington and Carver. Wins here will be tough to come by, though the Cohasset boys appear to match up pretty well with Norton and they get them at home this time around. The Skippers will then wrap up the season at home versus Harwich and Hull.

"Obviously, there's not a lot of margin for error with this schedule," said Ford. " Norwell, Abington and Carver are three of the strongest Div. 3 teams in the state, and Mashpee and Norton are strong teams too. We're really going to have to scrap for any win we can get."

There is, of course, one potential silver lining to this savage slate.

"If we get in to the state tourney, we'll be more than battle-tested," concluded Ford. "Division Four competition will look a lot easier than what we've been facing in our league."

Boys hoop notes

The Skippers had the unusual and rather dubious honor of watching an opposing player reach the 1,000-point plateau against them for the second time this season on Friday. Carver senior Ralph Frazier hit quadruple-figures for his career on a first half foul shot seven minutes into the game, his eighth of 11 points on the night.

This put a temporary halt to the action on Cohasset's home floor, as Carver High principal Kathy Spencer conducted a brief ceremony to mark the occasion. All things considered, Ford didn't seem to mind the interruption.

"Ralph is a class player and a great kid," said the Cohasset coach. "He plays the game hard and he's such a nice player. I was happy for him."

Of course, the Cohasset coach would much rather have preferred for Frazier to get the points at Norwell on Tuesday. The 6-foot-4 power forward entered that game needing 21-points to reach 1,000, but the Clippers had other thoughts. The host Norwell squad held Frazier to a mere two-points in the first half as they rushed out to a 24-point first half advantage, quickly turning what was supposed to be a hard-fought battle between unbeaten teams into a laugher.

"Obviously we couldn't have caught Carver at a worse time than we did," noted Ford. "They were loaded for bear after that loss, and they took it out on us."

defender to circle in on Norwell goalie Ryan O'Shaughnessy. The junior netminder did a nice job holding the post and squaring up, though, and took the shot of his chest protector.

O'Shaughnessy came up big again with just 30 seconds showing on the clock when a scrum in front saw the puck pop back towards the blueline, allowing Libby to retrieve it and walk in for a point blank wrister from 20 feet out that the Norwell goalie was somehow able to pick up through the screen and flash out his blocker just in time to send it over the crossbar.

"This game was huge for us," said Hurley. "In games like this you look for your big players to step up and that's just what we got."

Norwell surprised Cohasset early as well, as Spitz finished on a pass from Rob Himberg just 3:10 in to make it 1-0.

The Skippers took just 13 seconds to respond, however, winning the faceoff and pushing right into Norwell's zone, where Anderson batted home the rebound of a Matt Davis shot from the boards. Tim Straughn was credited with the other assist.

The go-ahead goal for Cohasset came 1:10 before the break, as Straughn picked up a weak clearing attempt and fired home a wrister from 30 feet out.

The Skippers appeared to control much of the flow throughout the second period, a point that was hammered home when Anderson scored on a shorthanded breakout midway through the second period.

Cohasset shot itself in the foot with a series of bad penalties from about the midpoint of the game on, arguably the most costly of these being an inadvertent tripping call on Straughn 7:16 into the second period, the third minor of the game for the big, strong-skating blue liner his third minor of the game—drawing an immediate game misconduct. The loss of the defensive stalwart had an obvious trickle down effect for the Skippers, who seemed to have trouble in their defensive end the rest of the way—as indicated by the final four third period penalties.

"Those penalties really prevented us from staying in control of the game like we were early on," said Cohasset's coach Walsh. "Once we got out of that flow, we just never seemed to get it back.

"There were guys who played hard, like Tom Anderson and Greg O'Connell, and a few others, but we just never seemed to click."

The loss of standout defenseman Tim Straughn (#13) to penalties proved costly for the Skippers in Saturday's 3-3 tie with Norwell.

Coaching vacancies

For the spring, 2002 seasons, Cohasset High is seeking a girls lacrosse coach and the Cohasset Middle School is seeking a softball coach. Interested individuals should call Athletic Director Ron Ford at 781-383- 6103.

sprints.

Coh-Sci did not end up taking first in any of the 12 events, but Cohasset juniors David Ingber and Bryan Bilton took home seconds in the 50 freestyle (25.78) and 100 backstroke (1:11.63), respectively.

Taunton's highlight of the day was when their senior captain, Ryan Clark, qualified for Sectionals in the 100 freestyle with a time of 55.59 seconds.

The Sci-Cohs closed the day solidly, taking second in the 400-yard free relay, recording the best time the team has this year.

"I was very proud that the team finished strong even though the outcome had already been decided," lauded Kearney. "That shows some real character."

Two days after that meet, the Skipper-Sailors faced Cardinal Spellman in the beautiful Randolph facilities, the practice sight for the Sci-Cohs two years ago. Not only that, but former CHS teacher and swim coach Mary Ferrazzi found herself coaching against her old team.

Even though the Sailors-Skippers were missing a few team members in this contest, they held their own, winning four events.

Bilton won the 200 freestyle, a longer event than he usually competes in, coming in with a time of 2:15.72. Bilton won the 100 backstroke as well later in the day, comfortable taking it at 1:12.06.

Scituate freshman Danielle Swain took first place in the 100 fly with a very impressive 1:16.58. She also put in an impressive showing in the 50 free, taking second with a 26.88.

The SciCohs won the 200 medley relay, and would have gone 1-2 if the second place team had not gotten disqualified. The winning team consisted of Cohasset senior captain Kelly Stone, CHS junior Julie Shea, and Scituate juniors Kathryn Noonan and Amanda Turner.

Community Center nursery school registration starts

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School announces nursery school applications for the 2002-2003 school year will become available on Tuesday, Jan. 22 at the Nursery School and Community Center offices.

Nursery School registration is based on a lottery system. Applications will be available Jan. 22 - 29.

Completed applications must be returned to the South Shore Community Center office by Wednesday, Jan. 30. Application envelopes should be marked nursery school registration application.

Parents registering their child in the 3-year-old program should enclose a copy of the child's birth certificate to ensure proper placement of students in the program. All applications must include the $90 registration fee. Family membership for the school year is included in the fee. There is no financial commitment for children who are placed on the waiting list; checks will be returned.

The lottery will be drawn the week of Feb. 4. Nursery School acceptance letters will be sent via the mail the following week.

The school offers three levels of programs to meet the needs of 3 to 5-year-olds. Programs run from 9 - 11:30 a.m. and 12:30 -3 p.m. Some extended before and after school programs will be available.

The nursery program is for children who will be three years of age by Oct. 20. The pre-kindergarten program is for children who are, or will be 4 years old by Oct. 20, 2002. The four day and five day enrichment programs are offered to older 4-year-olds and 5-year-olds who have attended a pre-kindergarten program but are ineligible for kindergarten, or would benefit from an enrichment year.

Please direct questions regarding placement to the director, Lynne Sheridan at 383-0036. Parent observation welcome.

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School is licensed by The Massachusetts Office of Child Care Services.

Police arrested nine last month

December was a relatively quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were nine arrests: 3 for Outstanding Warrant; 1 for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor; 2 for Assault and Battery; 1 for Illegal Possession of a Class "A" Substance; and finally, 2 for Illegal Possession of a Class "D" Substance, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

During the month of December, the police department investigated 11 motor vehicle accidents, three of which resulted in personal injury. There were 161 Motor Vehicle Citations issued totaling $4,125 in fines. Additionally, there were 71 Parking Tickets issued for $2,075 in fines. There were 6 Criminal Complaints issued.

Also in December, the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 720 calls for police services, of those, 132 were Emergency 911 calls, Noonan said.

In the month of December, there were two Breaking and Entering offenses, both in a commercial business, he said.

Finally, in the month of December, Detective Greg Lennon attended an eight-hour presentation on Dec. 3 in Boxborough titled, " Terrorism: Understanding the Threat and Developing an Integrated Response." Keynote speakers included the Governor, FBI Boston SAC, US Attorney and Attorney General. The training focused on the nature of the terrorism threat in Massachusetts, understanding the terrorist mindset, activities and threats in Massachusetts, Biological and Chemical Weapons of mass destruction, explosives, attacks on our infrastructure, an overview of the new Anti-Terrorism Task Force (ATTF), and lessons learned from past acts of domestic and international terrorism.

IT'S HAPPENING

Arts and crafts

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades K-3 arts and crafts programs by calling 781-383-4109.

Arts and crafts for grades K-3 will be held from 3 to 4:30 p.m. Mondays at the Joseph P. Osgood School.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $42 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin Monday, Jan. 28, continuing through March 4. The class will not meet during February school vacation.

For more information, details and registration call the Recreation Office at 781-383-4109.

Rotary announces phone book drive

The members of the Rotary Club of Cohasset have announced the kick off of their annual Cohasset Phone Book and Buyers Guide drive.

Marking its 39th year, the Rotary Club Cohasset Phone Book has grown to become one of the most popular and widely used community resources. In addition to local phone numbers, residents have come to rely on the publication as a reference for everything from town government information to street map locations.

The Cohasset Phone Book is also viewed as the premiere buyers guide for Cohasset residents in search of goods or services. With low rates and high readership level, an advertisement in the Rotary Club Phone Book makes perfect sense for all local businesses.

All of the advertising dollars generated through the phone book are redirected in the form of support for many local organizations and charitable institutions serving Cohasset citizens. The money also helps fund annual scholarships for high school graduates and current college students.

Persons and organizations interested in finding out more about the benefits of advertising in the Rotary Club Phone Book and Buyers Guide should contact Ed Fox at Fox Associates 781-383-3000.

The Rotary Club of Cohasset is an organization of business and professional leaders united to provide humanitarian service, encourage high ethical standards in all vocations, and help build goodwill and peace in our town, state country and throughout the world. In more than 160 countries worldwide, approximately 1.2 million Rotarians belong to more than 30,000 Rotary clubs.

Relay For Life events

Planning for the American Cancer Society's annual Relay For Life in Cohasset is ready to begin. Area residents wishing to join the volunteer planning committee for this event are encouraged to contact Mary at the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880, Ext. 229; or Event Chairman, Gordon Behrer at 617-770-7989 or by email at gchebrer@aol.com.

The first meeting of the planning committee is scheduled for Thursday, Jan. 17 from 6:30-8 p.m. at the Cohasset High School cafeteria, 143 Pond St., Cohasset. All interests and talents are welcome.

The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset is set for May 17 and 18 at Cohasset High School.

Relay for Life is the American Cancer Society's nationwide, signature activity. Last year, 11 Relay For Life events took place around southeast Massachusetts raising more than $2.3 million for the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, advocacy and local patient services.

If you are interested in finding out more about Relay For Life, call 1-888-648-4880 and press 3, to be connected to the local office.

Gardeners to meet

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting Jan. 22 at the Second Congregational Church.

"The Emerald Necklace: Restoring the Vision Preserving the Legacy" will be the topic. Located in Boston and Brookline and designed by Frederick law Olmsted, America's first landscape architect, this environmental treasure of six parks was constructed in the years 1878-1896. Simone Auster, executive Director of Emerald Necklace Conservancy, will speak about this special landscape and the restoration work currently underway and planned.

Coffee will be served at 9 a.m.

Bradley office hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D – Hingham, will hold district office hours this Thursday, Jan. 24, at the Cohasset Town Hall, first floor meeting room, from 5-6 p.m. If you are unable to attend this scheduled office hours, but would like to meet with Bradley, call (617) 722-2120 to schedule an appointment.

Broadway goes disco

Quincy native lands role in 'Saturday Night Fever - The Musical'

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

From the first time he saw it in 1977, Quincy native Rich Hebert knew that "Saturday Night Fever" was more than just another movie. The film told the tale of Tony Manero (John Travolta), a young man who finds meaning in his life through the dancing he does at a neighborhood disco. The story may have taken place in Brooklyn, but Hebert says it could just as easily have been set on the South Shore.

"Back then, I was living the life of Tony Manero at clubs like Uncle Sam's in Hull and the Mad Hatter in Boston," explains Hebert, a now New York-based actor and singer who returns to Massachusetts next week with the national tour of "Saturday Night Fever — The Musical" at Boston's Wang Theatre. "My friends and I were out at the discos practically every night. The next day we'd get together to play some basketball and compare notes on what we did the night before."

A 1975 graduate of Quincy High School, Hebert was a student at Boston University when the John Badham-directed film was released. "I saw the movie four times at the old Strand Theatre in Quincy. I even took all my friends to see it, because one of them really reminded me of a lot of Travolta. I loved rock n' roll as much as the next guy in those days, but I also fully embraced disco."

A whole new generation now has a chance to discover the disco craze that dominated the late 1970s, thanks to the "Saturday Night Fever" stage production which originated in London, played Broadway, and is now on tour in the United States. The show, being presented by the film's producer Robert Stigwood, features several Top 10 hits from the film's legendary soundtrack. Many of the songs were originally performed by the Bee Gees, including "Stayin' Alive," "How Deep Is Your Love," "Tragedy," "Jive Talkin,'" "Night Fever," and "You Should Be Dancing."

More than 20 years after his own disco fever broke, Hebert won't be donning Tony's signature white suit on stage. He will instead play the character's father, Frank Manero, Sr., remembered by fans of the film as a man often in conflict with his youngest son.

"Frank, Sr. is just a hardworking blue collar guy," explains Hebert. "He has no higher aspirations than just to keep his family on track. He is out of work and has very few job prospects, however, and he is feeling a little emasculated. His son, Tony, is earning money that the family needs and the father knows that if Tony leaves the house the family will be in trouble. He finds the whole situation very frustrating."

While the movie explored the darker themes of gang violence and drug use, the stage adaptation is "more of a sanitized version of the story," according to Hebert. "There are still some heavy subjects being dealt with, but is more about the music and the dancing. It really works well, too, because you do want to hear these songs sung. You almost want to sing along. The songs are so good that you can't get them out of your head."

Quincy native Rich Hebert returns to Boston next week to perform in "Saturday Night Fever — The Musical" on stage at the Wang Theatre. Hebert will play the role of Frank Manero, Sr., remembered by fans of the film as a man often in conflict with his youngest son.

Disco's alive and well in the new Broadway show "Saturday Night Fever— The Musical."

If the music and moves are familiar to Hebert, the same cannot be said for all members of the touring company. "Most of the cast was born after the movie came out. They had certainly never owned any polyester bell bottoms. When we had our first costume fittings, they couldn't believe that people had actually dressed this way in the 1970s. I had to tell them that they did and that I still had some of the real clothes from that time in my closet."

Following his 1979 graduation from BU with a BFA in Acting, Hebert embarked on a performing career that has included Broadway roles in "The Life," "Sunset Boulevard," "Les Miserables," and "Rock 'N Roll: The First 5,000 Years." In the early 1980s, Hebert played Judas in an extended run of "Godspell" at Boston's Charles Playhouse. He has not been on a Boston stage, however, since he played Rum Tum Tugger in the first national tour of "Cats." Hebert has also been seen on television in series including "Law and Order: SVU" and in the feature film, "Conspiracy Theory," with Mel Gibson. Over the years, he has watched a fellow BU classmate from Wareham achieve her own considerable degree of show business success.

"Geena Davis ("The Accidental Tourist,""Thelma and Louise") is still a very good friend of mine. Interestingly, she was used very little in the productions we did at BU She was this very tall, beautiful girl and still they didn't know what to do with her. Geena ended up doing our posters, because in addition to being a very good actress she is also a good artist."

Hebert has also maintained many friendships from his childhood in the Germantown section of Quincy. Although his father passed away last year, his mother remains in the city. He also has sisters in Quincy and Weymouth, while a brother lives in New York State. Boston will mark Hebert's final performance in 'Saturday Night Fever," although the national tour will continue through July. After a skiing vacation in New Hampshire, Hebert will return to New York to explore new roles. He won't be alone at the Wang, though, when he ends his one year run as the elder Manero.

"There are at least 20 of my family and friends coming to see the show on Saturday night, when I have promised them they will really get the fever," Hebert says with a laugh.

("Saturday Night Fever — The Musical" will be at The Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont Street, Boston, from January 22-27, 2002. For tickets and information, call 1-888-889-8587.)

An addition and remodeling at the Rockland Memorial Library several years ago allowed the building's beautiful rotunda become a home for artwork by local artists.

Rotunda at Rockland Library features local talent

By Patrick Cronin
PCRONIN@CNC.COM

Elaine Mann has been interested in art since she was a child drawing on a chalkboard in school. "I feel as though I have been drawing all my life," said Mann. "One of my fist palettes was on a blackboard at school."

Mann's artwork will be displayed at Art in the Rotunda in the Rockland Memorial Library through the end of January. Most of her paintings and prints are taken from her travels across the world including Europe, Switzerland, France, and Mexico.

Mann, who grew up in Hanover and now lives in Jamaica Plain, began to take professional art classes while she was working full time as a nursing supervisor at Harvard's Psychiatric Unit at the Massachusetts Mental Health Center.

"I used to work as a nurse," said Mann. "I would work the 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. shift which would allow me to take art classes in the morning."

Mann said she took several diverse art classes in colleges, workshops, museums, and by private instructors. She also became a member of a number of art associations including "Partners in Printmaking" out of DeCordova Museum School in Lincoln.

Mann's artwork has been displayed all over the country.

"I had a one women show in August at the World Trade Center," said Mann. "It was an invitation only event."

Mann has also had art shows in Ireland and France but is happy to have her work displayed in Rockland.

"I grew up around here," said Mann. "I heard about the Art in the Rotunda at the Rockland Memorial Library and thought it would be a great idea to expose my work to people who live around here."

Since 1995, the Rockland Memorial Library has given local artists an opportunity to share their work with the public. It also gives residents a chance to meet with local artists and discuss their work.

"We thought it would be a great idea for art exhibits," said organizer Carole Mooney. "It gives area artists a chance for their artwork to be displayed and gives residents a chance to view the artwork of their fellow residents."

The library remodeling and addition made Art in the Rotunda possible. Once the circulation desk was moved from the spacious rotunda, it became the perfect gallery to display local talent.

"It's also really nice for people who visit the library and are interested in art," said Mooney. "I think the artwork inspires others."

Mooney said the artwork of Keith Favazza, who was the featured artists in September, inspired many including students at Rockland High School. Favazza displayed his artwork from "A Time For Heroes." The work pictured a young girl, growing up in Pennsylvania, struggling to understand and cope with the bombing of Pearl Harbor.

Mooney said one of the great things about Art in the Rotunda is the variety of artwork they have been able to showcase over the years.

"Over the years there have been a diverse variety of artwork displayed," said Mooney. "We have had paintings, photographs and Christmas cards. Very contemporary work. Once people discover we have artwork being displayed they keep coming back to see more."

Mooney said they have a couple of artists lined up for the next two months including Rockland resident Robert Dunn. Dunn graduated from Rockland High school and has just graduated from Umass Dartmouth. He won several art awards in High School and his artwork will be displayed for the entire month of February.

Artists interested in displaying work at the Rockland Memorial Library can contact Carole Mooney at (781) 871-1234.

Former Hanover native Elaine Janson Mann's work is currently on display in the Rotunda at the Rockalnd Memorial Library.

Roasted Pear Salad

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

In the last few years, roasted pears have become ubiquitous, showing up on restaurant menus as salads, not desserts. They are usually paired with a spicy green, goat cheese, and perhaps a few toasted nuts. I have improvised a few of these at home over the years and found that they range from show-stopping to an insipid pile of rabbit food. The secret is in how the pears are roasted as well as in the perfect balance of the remaining ingredients.

I started with the pears. First, I peeled, quartered, and coated them with olive oil and then placed them in a 400-degree oven for 30 minutes. They turned out bland and dry and looked like a Vermonter in March (pale and gray). Next, I sliced them, coated them with sugar and melted butter, and roasted them in a 500-degree oven for 15 minutes. I didn't like the added sugar and didn't want to have to turn them, a step that seemed necessary for even coloring. Finally, I quartered the pears, placed them in a buttered baking dish, covered the dish, and placed them in a 450-degree oven. After 15 minutes, I removed the cover and let them cook another 10 minutes, or until done. They were perfect — shiny, spotted golden brown and very sweet.

My testing was done with Anjou pears but I also tried red skin pears (firm and flavorful), Bartlett (slightly less intense and less firm), Bosc (dry and grainy). Once the pears have been roasted, they keep fine for 3 to 4 hours so the roasting may be done ahead of time. However, they must not be refrigerated or heated since their texture will suffer.

For the greens I tested arugula, bibb lettuce, watercress, radicchio, and endive. Arugula was the clear winner – sharp, peppery and a nice foil for the sweet pears. Watercress would work in a pinch but bibb and mache didn't have enough bite. Radicchio and endive are nice additions to the arugula but are overpowering on their own.

Goat cheese is widely available in small logs that weigh 4 or 5 ounces. Trying to slice them into neat medallions is very difficult unless you use a cool knife and wipe it with a damp towel after each slice. However, the cheese is just as tasty if it is simply crumbled over the top of the salad. For the dressing, I started with olive oil. I then tried many different types of vinegar and preferred both red and white balsamic. I used a four-to-one ratio of oil to vinegar and also added salt, mustard, and shallot.

To assemble the salad for 6 people, I started with three bunches of arugula. (Washed, dried and cut into bite sized pieces it ended up to be about 9 cups.) I then placed them into a large bowl and added the optional endive and radicchio. Next, the vinaigrette was added and the greens were tossed to coat.

This salad is best portioned onto plates and then topped with the crumbled cheese and pear quarters. I tried chopping the pears into bite-size pieces but they lose their identity and the salad loses some of its style. Topping the finished salad with chopped toasted pecans added crunch and flavor although they are optional.

ROASTED PEAR SALAD WITH ARUGULA AND GOAT CHEESE

Make sure that you are using fresh, not aged, goat cheese. It should be the texture of cream cheese. Use the largest possible mixing bowl to toss the salad. It makes tossing much easier. To vary this recipe, try dusting the pears with 5-spice powder before baking.

3 Anjou, Bartlett or Red Skinned pears peeled, quartered and cored
1/4 teaspoon salt
1tablespoon red or white balsamic vinegar
4 tablespoons best quality olive oil
1/4 teaspoon Dijon mustard
2 teaspoons finely chopped shallot
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
3 bunches arugula washed, dried, stemmed and cut into bite-sized pieces, about 9 cups
1/2 cup thinly sliced radicchio (optional)
1/2 cup thinly sliced endive, (optional)
4 to 5 ounce log goat cheese, crumbled
1/2 cup chopped pecans toasted in a dry skillet over medium heat until fragrant and lightly browned, about 3 minutes

1. Heat oven to 450 degrees and adjust rack to the center position. Place the pears in a lightly buttered baking dish and cover with aluminum foil. Place baking dish into oven and cook for 15 minutes. Remove foil and bake for 10 minutes more or until the pears are just tender and dark golden brown on the bottom. Remove from oven and allow to cool to room temperature.

2. Place the salt and vinegar in a small bowl. Whisk until the salt has dissolved, about 10 seconds. Add the olive oil, mustard, shallot, and pepper and whisk until smooth, thickened and evenly colored. Place the arugula in a large mixing bowl and add the optional radicchio and endive. Add the vinaigrette and toss gently to evenly coat the greens. Distribute the greens onto six plates. Top each with crumbled goat cheese and two pear quarters. Sprinkle the optional pecans over the salads if desired.

Serve immediately. Serves 6 —

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 16

The moon enters laidback Pisces at 9:00 a.m. No major planetary activity occurs today. You can make gains developing creative projects. Spend time alone; listen to music, write poetry, curl up with a good book. Get extra rest tonight.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 17

A Pisces moon continues to place the spotlight on creative endeavors. Follow your hunches. If you have work projects to accomplish, finish old business rather than starting new activities. Move cautiously in business or romance. Sleep on new ideas; don't take action. A lunar alignment to Pluto at 6:27 p.m. may generate emotional thunderstorms. Keep a cool head.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18

The planet Mercury has been slowing its rate of motion in the past few days, preparing for retrograde travel. At 3:50 p.m. Mercury, standing at 14 1/2-degrees of Aquarius, begins to travel in retrograde motion until February 8. Making important decisions, launching major enterprises, signing contracts are off limits in this period. The planet Mars moves into Aries at 5:54 p.m., and Venus moves into Aquarius at 10:42 p.m. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 9:27 p.m. until 9:35 p.m., when it enters Aries. Venus and Mars align in the early morning hours, setting the stage for a romantic evening.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 19

An Aries moon sets a quick pace this weekend. You can be most productive, if you are well-organized. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion. Get back in the swing of favorite sports and exercise regimens. Forget your troubles and go for the good times this evening.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 20

The sun enters Aquarius at 1:02 a.m., remaining there until February 18. The Aries moon continues active travel until 8:50 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. Put career or domestic concerns on the back burner; let off some steam and go for the good times.

MONDAY, JANUARY 21

The moon enters earthy Taurus at 9:47 a.m., bringing a change of pace. This day rates high across the board. If you are working, you can be most productive. On the other hand, influences are great for socializing or just veging out and enjoying the moment. The first quarter moon occurs at 12:46 p.m., serving as a reminder that this moon is growing in light. A full moon will culminate next Monday, January 28.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 22

The moon continues to travel in Taurus and forms a 90-degree contact to Neptune between noon-3:00 p.m. It may be difficult to concentrate on practical matters in this period. An applying alignment of the sun and Mars brings an energy boost later in the afternoon and evening. Saturn prepares to interact with Neptune, urging you to find time alone. Reassess your values and set new goals; strive for greater spiritual vision.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 23

Avoid rigid time schedules this morning. The Taurus moon aligns with unpredictable Uranus at 7:29 a.m. and becomes inactive. If you are working, handle routine chores and follow through on unfinished projects. Influences turn around completely at 7:28 p.m., when the moon enters lively Gemini. This is a great evening to get in touch with friends you haven't heard from in a while or to chat on the internet or just hang out with favorite buddies.

Winter protection for trees, shrubs and perennial gardens

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As dusk approached on an overcast afternoon in early January, I ventured forth for a brief stroll through the slumbering garden. Only the soothing sounds of bubbling water from my little fishpond broke the silence as darkness fell over the dormant winter landscape. Despite periods of frigid weather, the bubbling pump furnishes a nearly perpetual opening in the frozen surface of the water garden, providing a constant source of water for wildlife all winter long. When temperatures drop below freezing, unique ice sculptures are created by this gurgling, miniature fountain, their forms changing throughout the day as sun, wind and shadows continually influence nature's artwork.

Several minor storms over the past week have delivered much needed precipitation to our area. Predictions of a spring drought are already being mentioned in local weather reports, reminding gardeners of our responsibility to conserve water. The need to insulate our precious plants is especially critical this winter season. Warm temperatures in December may have delayed our efforts to provide plants with winter protection, but Mother Nature is sure to deliver many weeks of chilly temperatures and damaging winds in the weeks to come. Quick action should be taken to preserve fall transplants, tender perennials, and evergreens prone to heaving out of the ground and winter desiccation.

Evergreen plants, especially boxwoods, and broad-leaf shrubs including rhododendrons, mountain laurels, Leucothoe and Oregon hollies, face the greatest hazards, particularly in this year of diminished rainfall. Subjected to desiccating winds and winter sun, their leaves may be scorched, particularly during the latter half of the winter. Most of these woody ornamentals appreciate sheltered or shady locations to minimize this exposure. For shrubs or boxwood hedges prone to winterburn, the construction of a temporary windscreen may be helpful to minimize damage. Install a series of stakes around these bushes and wrap with burlap leaving the top open for air circulation. Anti-desiccant sprays, available from your local nursery, can be applied to evergreen leaves on warmer days to further protect their leaf surfaces and may be especially beneficial this season. Similar steps should be taken to protect the stems and buds of the showy, but often finicky, blue and pink hydrangeas.

Evergreen plants, especially boxwoods, and broad-leaf shrubs including rhododendrons, mountain laurels, Leucothoe and Oregon hollies, face the greatest hazards, particularly in this year of diminished rainfall.

January tends to be a month of fluctuating temperatures, which often takes its toll on many shallow-rooted perennials and fall transplants. The alternate freezing and thawing of the soil surface may cause the crowns of these plants to lift above ground, exposing the roots to drying winds and cold temperatures. Monitor your perennial gardens for plants that may have heaved out of the ground when temperatures rise above freezing. These plants can usually be gently pushed back into the soil on a warm day.

The application of winter mulches is an ideal means of protecting dormant plants from heaving out of the ground. Mulches applied over roots after the ground freezes will insulate the surface of the soil. The purpose of this kind of mulch is not to keep the plant warm but rather to keep the ground beneath frozen. The upper two or more inches of the applied mulch alternately freeze and thaw when temperatures rise and fall but the ground remains frozen and slowly thaws when temperatures begin to moderate. It is usually advisable to spread these mulches after the ground has frozen to ensure that most of our destructive little critters have hibernated or they may seek refuge in your cozy covering.

Perhaps the best winter mulch of all is Mother Nature's gift of snow. Unfortunately, the majority of our South Shore winters are open with little or no snow cover. When Mother Nature cannot provide, gardeners can assist in the insulating process by laying down a layer of compost, manure, shredded pine bark or chopped leaves, all of which will gradually benefit the soil by adding moisture-retentive organic matter to the soil.

Alternative mulches include salt marsh hay, straw, pine needles and evergreen branches. Straw may need to be anchored in place, especially in exposed areas, by laying branches over the protected areas. White pine needles are my preferred mulch because they are light and airy and stay in place as they have a tendency to cling to one another. Evergreen boughs, such as those from a discarded Christmas tree, provide valuable protection for evergreen perennials in sunny, exposed locales, including candytuft (Iberis), evergreen ground phlox (Phlox subulata), coral bells (Heuchera) and pinks (Dianthus), which may be subject to winterburn due to dry, desiccating winter winds. The application of an anti-desiccant spray would offer additional protection.

When weather conditions and time permit, I venture into the garden throughout the winter months to monitor my plants, always on the lookout for signs of animal intruders, winter damage and signs of spring. Our mild December temperatures prompted many bulbs to sprout prematurely, and although the exposed tips of foliage may be damaged when spring finally arrives, these harbingers of the new growing season should still reward us with glorious blossoms. Cold, gloomy days will be spent browsing through the innumerable catalogs and gardening magazines that arrive daily and dreaming of the beauty resting beneath the frozen earth.

Glenn Pratt stands at the memorial to Cohasset's Gold Star Mothers in the expanded section of Woodside Cemetery. Pratt's work on the cemetery expansion, memorial and countless other projects led to his selection as Citizen of the Year.

The determination to get things done

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Glenn Pratt likes to talk in short, declarative sentences. He's direct, looks you in the eye and doesn't use a lot of flowery language.

So it's not surprising that Pratt isn't one to talk about himself. If he did — with the enormous list of contributions he has made to Cohasset — this article would quickly turn into a series.

"Some things just need to be fixed," Pratt said about his involvement in town over the years . "Somebody has to do it. So, let's just get to it."

Glenn Pratt named Citizen of the Year

Whether it's his dogged determination over 20 years to see more cemetery space in town, remembering local soldiers who made the ultimate sacrifice, helping to lead the effort to expand the community center or serving as an elected official – Pratt approaches them all with a can-do attitude that gets things accomplished.

It is his generosity of spirit and true dedication to his hometown in numerous ways — highlighted by his more recent efforts to build a memorial to local mothers who lost sons in wartime — that led to Pratt being named the Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year.

"Glenn was born and raised in Cohasset, and has been a loyal and concerned citizen," wrote his sister

School building funding appeal flunks

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Six minutes was all it took for the state Department of Education to send representatives from several South Shore towns packing yesterday morning.

"We want to work with other legislators whose districts are impacted. This isn't going to just go away."
— State Sen. Robert Hedlund

The group made the early morning trek to Malden to plead for more funding for School Building Assistance without which towns will have to wait longer for state reimbursement to kick in on their multi-million dollar school projects. The wait will add hundreds of dollars of year to homeowners' property tax bills.

Representatives from Norwell, Pembroke, Cohasset and Hull tried to persuade DOE officials to continue the current practice of funding the program at $52 million rather than the proposed $20 million. More funding translates into

AvalonBay won't file until sewer issue is resolved

Selectmen briefed on affordable housing law

By Mary Ford and Evan Schiff
MFORD@CNC.COM

AvalonBay Communities – the company proposing a 250-unit apartment complex off Route 3A – is still six-to-eight weeks away from filing for a comprehensive permit, an Avalon official said.

Michael Roberts, senior acquisitions director, said the company continues to grapple with which route to take regarding wastewater disposal from the project.

"I wish I could be more specific but there are still two options out there we're weighing."
— Michael Roberts, AvalonBay

"It's a very complicated scenario," he said. "We want to have it resolved ahead of time (before filing for a permit)."

AvalonBay is looking at buying sewer capacity from Hull or building an on-site treatment system on the former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor property, which on Rt. 3A is across from Atlantic Bagel.

Roberts said AvalonBay has discussed buying sewer capacity with Hull officials. But the logistics of connecting to the Hull system that would include installing two miles of pipe would have to be worked out, he said. Roberts could not say which proposal — on-site system or connecting to Hull — the company was leaning toward.

"I wish I could be more specific but there are still two options out there we're weighing," he said.

Roberts did say Avalon is optimistic the wastewater treatment issue could be resolved and the project would move forward.

"This is part of our business," he

Harbor plans draw mixed reviews

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

More than 50 residents filed into St. Anthony's Church Parish Center last week to discuss specific design details regarding safety, public access and aesthetic improvement opportunities along Cohasset Harbor.

Some were less than thrilled about the proposed improvements to the area and a new citizens' group dubbed the "Friends of the Cohasset Harbor" voiced its concerns. The group was initiated by Border Street neighbors Dick Karoff and Sam Knox who have concerns about the future "look" of the harbor as well as public access and sidewalk maintenance.

But Dean Rizzo, executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private entity working with the town's village task force, assured participants the intent is not to destroy the harbor.

"I like to consider us all friends of the harbor," Rizzo said. "We want to maintain the integrity and rich history of the area."

Two of the most prominent residents of the harbor area, Herbie Jason and John Small who initiated several projects in Government Island, thought the improvements were a good idea.

"I think the plans look wonderful," Jason said. "The improvements are long overdue and Rizzo has done a magnificent job."

Rizzo emphasized the plans are simply preliminary drawings and nothing is set in stone.

"We're here to get your opinions and work with you," he said.

Howie Altholz, 80 Summer St., said the improvements could be a good idea as long as it is done for the proper reasons.

"The initial plans look good," he said. "I just hope it is being done so the town is a better place to live in rather than a nicer place for tourists to visit."

Roger Q. Hill, 19 Highland Ave., did not feel any changes in the area were necessary.

"Why don't we concentrate on other areas in town that need improvements? These changes only benefit certain people in town."

Steve Cecil, of the Cecil Group who gave the presentation, said if nothing else, the are around the harbor should be safe.

Bradley office hours

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D – Hingham, will hold district office hours this Thursday, Jan. 24, at the Cohasset Town Hall, first floor meeting room, from 5-6 p.m. If you are unable to attend this scheduled office hours, but would like to meet with Bradley, call (617) 722-2120 to schedule an appointment.

Burning season is underway

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis through May 1 for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch Center at 781-383-0260 from 9 am.-2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance, the fire department says. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact the issuing of permits. Burning hours are 10 a.m.-4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forest debris. Burning shall be conducted on land nearest to the place were the debris came from. Burning must be conducted at least 75 feet away from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover.

While burning, the fire must be attended at all times until completely extinguished. Have a water hose, rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

Cohasset census for 2002 mailed

The Town Census for 2002 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency, which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain veterans' benefits, and reduced tuition rates at state colleges and universities.

Dog forms are on a tear off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible although you may have recently renewed your 2001 license. If you did not receive your census, contact the Town Clerk's office.

Beach St. builder's plans move along

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Developer David Walsh wants to go ahead with plans to cut into the ledge in order to provide access to a luxury home he plans to build on a rocky hill off Beach Street in an area called Great Neck.

To that end, he is seeking a variance from the Conservation Commission to do some work within the 50-foot buffer zone at the start of the proposed driveway that would not have an adverse impact to the wetlands across the street, Walsh's engineers said.

But what might have been a routine matter if it involved another part of town was anything but at last week's meeting.

Beach Street neighbors along with other interested citizens have joined forces as the Great Neck Preservation Group to try and stop development of Walsh's lot and two others, owned by Ellen Morrissey. The group, which packed the cramped upstairs meeting room for the 9 p.m. hearing, would like to see the land remain as open space and be incorporated into the adjacent Great Brewster Woods.

And while the Conservation Commission allowed opponents to voice their concerns — Walsh and his engineers also had their say.

The prior owner's efforts to obtain a building permit to develop what is now Walsh's property (known as lot #2) were rejected by the building inspector because the slope of the driveway did not provide safe access.

But Walsh has invested a lot of time and money in designing a 700-foot driveway that winds its way up to where the house will be built at the grade of a wheelchair ramp.

He plans to use as much of the blasted ledge on site as possible and remove the rest — a proposal that caused some dispute at the meeting over interpretation of the town zoning bylaw.

Walsh said the building inspector's interpretation meant ledge blasted to create a driveway is exempt from the zoning bylaw and could be removed from the site, but attorney Rich Henderson, representing one of the Beach Street families, disagreed, saying the ordinance would not permit ledge removal in this case.

Plans are to cut into the ledge about four feet for the first 75 feet of the driveway that would be visible from the street. A small section of the driveway would involve a 23-foot cut but the average along the entire length would be about eight feet, Walsh said. He plans to use about 50 percent of the blasted ledge on site that would be crushed for use in a variety of ways including the drainage system that would be installed along both sides of the driveway.

After 2-1/2 hours of sometimes-heated discussion among commission members, neighbors, engineers and the property owner — the commission closed the hearing and asked Walsh to provide the following:

- A letter from zoning enforcement officer Bob Egan stating ledge removal is permitted under the zoning bylaw;
- A revised plan about where Walsh proposes to use the excavated ledge on the property;
- Cut and fill calculations on the removed ledge;
- Plans that show the width of the driveway (there was confusion over whether part of the driveway could be 11 feet in width as opposed to 12 feet).

Walsh promised to have the additional information within seven days. The commission has 21 days to made a decision.

Opponents to the project voiced concern over snow removal; whether emergency vehicle could negotiate the driveway; the proposed septic system and potential run-off from the site, among other concerns.

Commission Chairman Jim Dedes reminded those in attendance that his board's jurisdiction was limited to activity within the 50- and 100-foot wetlands buffer zone — areas that make up a small part of the project.

While the project would disturb some 275 square feet within the 50-foot wetland buffer zone near Beach Street, rather than replicate the wetland, Walsh plans to install plantings in an 875-square-foot area that would provide wildlife habitat.

Morrissey, who attended the meeting and plans to build in the two lots she owns, said later she would not sell her lots to the Great Neck group or the Cohasset Conservation Trust. The two groups would like to buy the property to join it with the adjacent Great Brewster Woods.

"My only intention is to build upon the land," she said.

Construction of new library begins

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

With smiles on their faces and shovels in their hands – members of the Board of Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library broke ground for the new library.

The celebration culminated years of work for the board and set in motion construction of the new library which is expected to take 12-14 months. The early morning snow and frigid temperatures did not stop about 70 people from attending the ceremony last Thursday at noon in front of the old Osgood School.

"This is a wonderful day for the town," said Patience Towle, library trustees chairman. "I'm so excited."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed thanked both Towle and the board for all their hard work and dedication to the project. He said it was an exciting day for Cohasset and he is glad the building is going to be preserved for future use.

"When the building closed as a school the town faced a dilemma with what to do with it," Koed said. "The library trustees stepped up and have done a great job."

Library director Janet Husband looks forward to the new library as an education center for both young and old.

"This is the beginning of a wonderful project that has been needed for many years," she said. "We are going to be able to provide modern library services with all kind of exciting displays."

Frank Adams, from Burt Hill Kosar Rittelmann Associates, the architectural firm that designed the building, said the building is a perfect fit for a library.

"It works extremely well in the space," he said. "The building has a presence of learning and of a library."

While the construction of the building should move along, there are still some unresolved issues. One is the receiving of a $1.5 million construction grant from the state.

In June, the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners announced that it awarded over $16 million for the construction of 10 public libraries in Acushnet, Blackstone, Chicopee, Chilmark, Gardner, Leverett, Palmer, Provincetown, Rowley and Sunderland. Cohasset wasn't awarded any money initially, and it is first on the waiting list to receive a grant as soon as the funding became available.

> "This is a wonderful day for the town."
> — Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees

In what could be good news for the town, Deborah Hill Bornheimer, a commissioner on the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners, said Acushnet and Provincetown were unable to meet the requirements for securing their grants, so the two towns were given an extension. Both of the towns have until March 7 to satisfy the board's needs otherwise the funding could be allocated to Cohasset.

Bornheimer, who is from Cohasset, said if either of the towns is not awarded the money, the commissioners would have to vote on the re-appropriation.

Another issue is the sale of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

In a previous interview, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is receiving plenty of inquiries about the sale of the Paul Pratt Library and will put the building out to bid in February.

Haddad has set a minimum bid of $700,000. This is the amount of money the town is counting on to help pay for the new library. At a projected cost of $3.9 million to turn the old Osgood School into a new library - the anticipated $700,000 from the sale of the old building is crucial to finance the project. If the building is sold for more money, it will reduce the amount the town needs to borrow.

Towle said selective demolition has already begun to the 1950 wing of the building and once completed, workers will start on the interior of the building.

Ryan Edward Leahy makes his debut

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

CRAZY WEATHER

Hello Cohasset! How is everyone doing with this crazy weather? Cold, then warm, then snow, then rain. Welcome to New England. We do not have much to complain about yet as it has not been too cold but a little more snow would be nice.

DERBY HONORS

Three Cohasset girls were recently awarded Headmaster's List certificates from Derby Academy in Hingham. Katharine Kuppens, the eighth-grade daughter of Michael and Cindy Kuppens; Jenna Larson, ninth-grade daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Larson and Maggie Pilczak, eighth-grade daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Pilczak all received this award. Great work to all of you!

A REAL CUTIE

One little guy who is too young for the snow joined his family on Nov. 8, 2001. Ryan Edward Leahy joined big brother John and big sister Alexandra at home, along with his mom and dad, Gina and Ed. Ryan weighed in at 7 lbs. 8 oz. and was 19-1/2 ins. long. He is a real cutie and is surrounded by love. Congratulations to the whole Leahy family on this wonderful new addition.

CLASS OF 1982 REUNION

Anyone who is reading this who was a member of the CHS Class of 1982 should try and plan to attend the next meeting for the 20th reunion. It will be held in Cohasset on Sunday eve, Feb 10. If you are interested in attending or know the whereabouts of some of your classmates, please call Marcy Brown Fleming at 781-585-9913 or email her marcydon@msn.com.

Chris Carr of Cohasset (dressed as an elf) helps out in the Christmas in the City program. That's his classmate Richard F. Walsh of Needham in the background.

AWARD WINNERS

Paul Buick, Eleanor Coughlin and Cindy Dedes, all of Cohasset, were presented recently with Partners in Excellence Awards for contributing to Partners HealthCare's excellence as a health-care provider. Recipients are nominated by their colleagues on the basis of their quality treatment and service, leadership and innovation, operational efficiency and outstanding community contributions. Eleanor works at Mass. General Hospital, a founding member of Partners; Paula works at Partners Healthcare and Cindy at Partners Home Care, Inc.

COMMUNITY SERVICE

Christopher J. Carr of Cohasset, a senior at B.C. High, recently assisted the homeless children of Boston. Christopher was one of the 125 BC High students who helped out at "Christmas in the City" at the Bayside Expo Center. The students are members of the BC High Key Society.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Andy Hamilton was a member of the 2001 Westfield State College football team that posted the best record in school history, won its first New England Football Conference Championship and qualified for its first NCAA tournament! Andy, a defensive back, is a junior at Westfield.

State Street employees Catherine Frazer of South Boston, left, and Jeanne Woo Hartlage, right of Cohasset, spent the day recently helping to construct a new home for Habitat for Humanity in Roxbury.

SPECIAL CONCERT

Cohasset's Second Congregational Church is hosting an Organ Concert on Sunday, Feb. 10 at 3 p.m. to celebrate the arrival of their new state-of-the-art digital organ. Roger Mansen, a professional organist from Concord, Massachusetts and sales representative from Marshall Ogletree Associates, will showcase the organ's capabilities with a selection of music ranging from spiritual to pop. This Rodgers Trillium 927 three-manual Classic Organ is fully programmable and features orchestral sounds so real, concert-goers will be looking for other instruments. The concert is free to the public and refreshments will be served. For more information, call 781-383-0345.

VOLUNTEER DAY

Jeanne Woo Hartlage of Cohasset was one of 600 State Street Corporation employees from the Boston area that volunteered at more than 50 service projects during the company's first "Global Volunteer Day." Held in conjunction with the United Nations' International Volunteer Day on Dec. 5, the event is part of the company's Global Outreach program.

VALENTINE'S TEA

In the late 1700s, unmarried women would place five bay leaves on their pillows on the eve of Valentine's Day. If tradition held true, the women would see their future mates while dreaming. Did you ever wonder how Valentine's Day came to be? Join the South Shore Natural Science Center at a special tea on Valentine's Day, and learn the history and traditions associated with this midwinter holiday. What makes flowers and chocolates a traditional gift for those we love? Learn the meanings of the various flowers in your Valentine's Day bouquet, and the history of the Valentine card, from its earliest beginnings to the present day. View a collection of vintage valentines that spans over 80 years. Bring a favorite or homemade valentine to the tea with you. Tea and delicious valentine treats will be served following the presentation. Part of the center's Thursday Tea Series for adults, on Thursday, Feb.14, from 1:30-3:30 p.m. Admission is $7 members, $10 non-members. Space is limited and pre-registration is required. To register, call (781) 659-2559.

That is all the news for this week. Please submit all news, photos and information to me no later than Monday mornings by noon. Also appearing next week will be the Schools In column. Please have all school related information to me no later than this Friday.

IT'S HAPPENING

Pianist performs at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now it its 11th year, St. Stephen's Church is presenting pianist Paul Carlson in a recital on Sunday, Feb. 10 at 3 p.m. Dr. Carlson, a graduate of Boston University, is an expert in the music and performance style of Debussy. Other areas of his expertise and interest include the music of pianists active during the several decades before World War I. Recent premiers by Carlson include works by Native Massachusetts composers John McDonald and Hayg Boyadjian. An experienced recitalist, Carlson has performed widely in the Boston area, maintains a large teaching studio in Arlington, and has taught at Gordon College and the Tanglewood Institute.

Another important feature of the recital is that it is to be the first performance played on the church's newly-refurbished 1906 Steinway grand piano, recently rebuilt by Brian Grinrod of New Hampshire.

A free-will offering will be taken. Also, there will be a reception following the concert.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., is handicap accessible, and there is ample parking in the village lot.

For more information, call 781-383-1083.

Carriage House Nursery School

The Carriage House Nursery School is having an open house on Saturday, Jan. 26 from 10-12 p.m. Parents and children are invited to come and meet the teachers and explore the classroom with their 3-5 year-olds.

Open house will be held on the second floor at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., (next to Town Hall). The nursery school will move back to its newly-renovated classroom this summer at 23 North Main St.

Applications are available and must be completed and returned to the school by Feb. 9. A $30 registration must accompany the completed registration form.

Nursery school registration is based on a lottery system: the lottery will be drawn the week of Feb. 11.

If you cannot make the open house, please call the school at 781-383-9785 and other arrangements will be made for you to visit the school and obtain an application.

The "young 3-year-old program" is for children who are age 2.9 in September; the older 3-year-old program is for older "3s" and young "4s;" and the pre-K program is for children who will be 4-years-old by Sept. 1.

Please direct questions to the director, Georgie Gladdys at 781-383-9785.

The Carriage House School is licensed by the Office of Child Care Services and is currently pursuing NAEYC accreditation.

Garage dance

Don't miss the dance at the Garage on Friday, Jan. 25, from 7 to 10 p.m. $5 per person in grades 6 and up.

Arts and crafts

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades K-3 arts and crafts programs by calling 781-383-4109.

Arts and crafts for grades K-3 will be held from 3 to 4:30 p.m. Mondays at the Joseph P. Osgood School.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $42 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin Monday, Jan. 28, continuing through March 4. The class will not meet during February school vacation.

For more information, details and registration call the Recreation Office at 781-383-4109.

Citizen of the Year

As editor of the Cohasset Mariner, it is my pleasure to announce that Glenn Pratt is the Citizen of the Year. The father of three has touched countless lives. Often through sheer determination, the 1965 CHS graduate has seen projects through to fruition — whether that be more cemetery space in town, remembering local soldiers who made the ultimate sacrifice, helping to lead the effort to expand the community center, or serving as an elected official.

While nominations were open, a total of 27 different individuals or families took the time to propose a citizen for the annual award, detailing his or her contributions to help make this town one we all love.

The selection committee consisting of Jennifer Piepenbrink, Osborne Ingram, Town Manager Mark Haddad and myself met at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square on Sunday to pore over the more than two dozen forms and heartfelt letters of nomination. The decision was unanimous although not reached without considerable discussion about all the very deserving candidates.

Brian Keating talked about Mr. Pratts' "incredible perseverance" in his nomination.

David A. Hassan said he "has given unselfishly of his time."

And his sister, Sheralyn Craig said, "Glenn has been a loyal and concerned citizen, he takes pride in the community and cares about what happens to the town."

So we extend our warm congratulations to Mr. Pratt, who, despite the same pressures of work and everyday life that face us all, still finds the time to devote countless hours to so many people and worthwhile causes and issues.

With this award, the Cohasset Mariner offers recognition for making a difference. In our society too many role models go unrecognized. Too often people today look to the sports, rock or movie stars with envy, when the real hero is the local police officer, firefighter, parent, teacher, church leader or government official.

The annual Citizen of the Year Award is our way of taking our hats off to those among us who go that extra mile without asking for anything in return but the intrinsic reward of helping to make Cohasset a better place.

Perhaps Robert E. Maree, Jr., who lost his brother in Vietnam and whose mother Betty was honored as a Gold Star Mother on Veterans Day, put it best in his nomination.

"Glenn and I are former classmates who reaped the benefits of growing up in a wonderful town," he said. "Now he has given back to the town and touched the hearts and souls of so many of us in the process.

"For that, I feel he is a worthy candidate for the Citizen of the Year award."

Koed to speak at election workshop

A former candidate and two Hingham town officials will discuss running for office and conducting a political campaign at a Hingham League of Women Voters workshop Jan. 30 at 7:30 p.m. at the Hingham Town Hall Sanborn Auditorium, 210 Central St. The forum is open to residents of Cohasset, Hull, Scituate, and Hingham.

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed, who also served on that town's water commission, Hingham Town Clerk Eileen McCracken and Hingham Moderator Thomas L. P. O'Donnell will review what's involved in running for office or working on a political campaign. Topics will include dealing with the media, campaign finance laws, understanding the responsibilities of the office, getting out the vote, and post election strategy. Future campaign managers may be interested, also. Last year's workshop was well attended. Handouts on financial reporting and nominating deadlines, etc., will be available.

The deadline for filing nominating papers in most South Shore towns is imminent.

Burying utility lines, costly for taxpayers

TO THE EDITOR:

Although we are supporters of most of what the Cohasset Revitalization Committee (CRC) wants to do, we were dismayed to read in the CRC's most recent newsletter that the CRC intends to pursue the 2 percent assessment on our utility bills at our next Town Meeting in order to pay for the $900,000 cost of placing the utility lines in the village underground.

First and foremost, the dollar figures used by the CRC as to the cost to be incurred by each homeowner are way out of line with reality. The CRC writes that the cost will be "$2 a month, or $24 a year to an average $100 phone and electric bill, and approximately 90 cents to a monthly cable bill." Simple arithmetic reveals that the CRC is leading us to believe that the cost to the average homeowner will be about $35 per year.

What world is the CRC living in? It certainly isn't ours.

Our most recent electric bill was $228; the monthly ATT Broadband bill is $141; the ATT local telephone bill is $35; and our ATT long distance bill is about $30 per month, for a total of $434 monthly, of which 2 percent is $8.68 per month — which equals $104.16 per year — which is three times the estimated cost provided by the CRC.

On that basis alone, the CRC should withdraw its petition until it comes up with some realistic figures. The numbers they are giving us are not the "average" bill, but rather are the minimum.

However, the CRC also needs to think about these issues before asking every homeowner to pay the $900,000 cost of burying the village area power lines:

1) Regardless of what the actual cost assessment is going to be on our utility bills, the 2 percent assessment formula is wholly unfair to anybody whose utility bills are above average. Burying the power lines is a fixed cost which bears no relation to the amount of electricity, phone service, or cable service used by a homeowner. Moreover, a 2 percent assessment over a number of years (at least six years according to the CRC newsletter) will prove to be a windfall for the utility companies, especially if there are sharp increases in the cost of utility service over that time period.

The only fair way to pay for this sort of project is to assess a flat fee on each utility user. Everybody pays the same amount and the assessment amount will be fixed without being subject to the variables of higher utility bills in the future. The CRC says it has worked out the exact cost of burying the power lines with the utility companies. Logically, there is absolutely no reason, therefore, why there cannot be a fixed assessment on each service user.

2) All of us are aware that municipal finances are facing a crisis in the near future. At the fall Special Town Meeting, we were informed that our town's debt ratios currently are at the maximum acceptable level. On that basis the new police station was voted down, even though the cost of that project was only a fraction of what the CRC wants us to pay in monthly assessments to bury the utility lines in the village area. Now, the state is telling us that we will not be reimbursed as promised for the new school projects, which could cost the average homeowner almost $1000 per year.

We already pay an outrageous amount in property taxes – Cohasset homeowners' taxes are among the top 10 in the state – and we obviously are going to be facing an even larger burden in the near future. Improving the aesthetics of the village would be nice, but in this economic environment there is no one who seriously could argue that burying the power lines at a cost of $900,000 is anywhere near a priority in our community. The additional $50-$100 each of us will be paying in additional utility fee assessments could go to something far more important in our town.

As we said at the outset, we support much of what the CRC is doing to improve the downtown and waterfront. And yes, ideally we would like to see those ugly utility lines be removed from the area of the Village and Common – and we would be willing to pay a reasonable fee to do so. But from our point of view, since it is going to cost us more than $100 per year in Year 1, and who knows how much in the years ahead, it's not worth it. Moreover, the proposed 2 percent assessment will extract from every taxpayer monies for which other projects and needs in our community will be far more deserving when the fiscal Sword of Damocles inevitably falls upon us.

Andrew and Claudia Quigley
38 Jerusalem Rd.

P.S. Also, let's not forget that a few years ago the town shut off a number of street lights to save a few thousand dollars in electric bills. It is a ridiculous proposition on its face to ask our citizens to come up with hundreds of thousands of dollars to bury utility lines in a small area of town when we can't even afford the puny sums necessary to pay for adequate street lighting because of the town's budget constraints.

Train was great

TO THE EDITOR:

I am a former resident of Scituate. I remember when there was train service from Scituate to Boston; it was wonderful. There was a station in the Egypt section of Scituate. I would go to Boston often and in comfort.

It was a sad day when they stopped the train and I had to commute to work by bus. In the summer I would spend hours getting home because of all the traffic going to the Cape. It will cost a lot of money to set up the system, but in the long run I believe people will enjoy the train more than sitting in traffic.

LIBRARY CORNER

The Children's Room

Mrs. Moody, children's librarian at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, would like to remind all students that the Children's Room has a variety of magazines to aid in your research projects. Calliope explores world history. Discover American history with Cobblestone. Faces, is a study of people, places, and cultures. Kids Discover chooses a different theme each month to study in depth. National Geographic World reports on a variety of issues from around the world. Zoobooks and Animals closely examine the world of animals.

Computer training sessions offered

If you've been having trouble adjusting to the new computer system at the library, you're not alone. We will be holding training sessions to teach you how to use the new Ibistro catalog effectively. The sessions will be held Tuesdays at 11 a.m. and Thursdays at 7 p.m.

Please call 781-383-1438 or stop by the reference desk to sign up. If these times are inconvenient, another time may be arranged.

Changes in the Library

Janet Husband, Paul Pratt Memorial Library director, would like to inform library users that a few changes have occurred. New hardcover mysteries, fiction and non-fiction have been shelved from the side wall to the middle section of the room. This has been done to allow more room for those using the computers to look-up a book. We hope this will be more convenient for all.

Childhood winters in the early 60s

LINCOLN HILLSIDE

KATHLEEN O'DONNELL

Writing this from a distance of many miles and many years, I remember January winters on Lincoln Hillside in the early 60s as a sensory-filled experience. Winter might seem to be a time of dormancy, but for me it had its own sparkling vitality. For many children it was a time of waiting; waiting for the ponds to freeze so that we could skate, so the boys could play ice hockey. After the ponds had frozen for three consecutive days we received the vital parental permission. There was nothing like that first skate of the winter, nothing more satisfying than that final slap on the sides of our skates after lacing them up so tight our circulation was threatened (no wonder our feet were always cold!). Many of the Lincoln Hillside children skated at the Duck Pond at Cushing Road/Spring Street, next to Butmans'.

The colors of children's winter clothing in the late 50s/early 60s s weren't today's hot pinks, imitation Dalmatian fleece or sparkle–encrusted skiwear. Children's winter clothing at that time was made of solid, utilitarian colors. Forest green, navy blue, dark brown and red made up our snow jackets, snow pants, mittens, scarves and hats. There was the occasional strip of Nordic-influenced decoration at the sleeves. Most of our accessories were hand-knitted. A fortunate few had waterproof mittens and gloves. Although woolen mittens were warm when dry, they turned into instruments of torture when wet. Was there ever anything as unpleasant as cold wet wool against your skin on a January day when you were a child? As we walked home after our skating sessions, the leafless trees of Cushing Road, Spring Street, Norfolk Road and Ash Street were silhouetted against the gray late afternoon skies.

Home again, and everything wet was removed. At that time many homes on Lincoln Hillside still had large cast iron furnaces, which sat like fat old men faithfully generating heat in the cellar. Wet things would be hung around the furnace and draped around the cast iron radiators elsewhere in the house. I've never found any heating system that could throw heat like a cast iron radiator, and I often long for that time when a radiator was so hot you could get a third-degree burn from leaning on it for too long. I don't think I've ever been as warm as when I lived in a house with cast iron radiators. Remembering the smell of wet wool drying on those radiators is the scent of Lincoln Hillside winters.

Security comes in many forms for children. I remember with warm clarity the good feeling of lying in a warm bed in a warm room in the wee hours of a snowy morning, after being woken by the town trucks pushing their heavy plows down the road. It was a good feeling to know that the good men of the Cohasset Roads Department were working through the night, taking care of us, plowing and sanding. They were a reminder that we lived in an ordered world. I'm sure I wasn't the only person at the time who got out of bed just to admire the beauty of their work…for a few minutes at least our road was clear and snowless, until the persistent flakes restored the road to its silent snowy slumber.

Remembering the smell of wet wool drying on those radiators is the scent of Lincoln Hillside winters.

On snowing mornings, the sound which meant the most to children in Cohasset at that time was the sound of the Cohasset Fire Department horn calling no-school. Children sat in kitchens around the town just praying for that sound. There was nothing more delicious than a day off from school, unless it was a day off from school when a test was due to be taken. When the much wished-for horn sounded the day opened up like a precious wintry flower; full of possibilities, phone calls to friends, plans to make.

One of our favorite places to go sledding was the front hill at the high school. The edge of the field where only a few months earlier the faithful field hockey moms had sat chatting and cheering in their beach chairs was transformed into an Indy 500 style line-up of assorted battered tin Flying Saucers, freshly-waxed Flexible Flyers and small toboggans. A four-second thrill of a ride then the trudge up the hill to do it all over again. Cold, fast, slightly dangerous and good clean fun. Ever present in those days were reminders of my Cohasset heritage. I could look across the high school field and see my great-grandparents former home, the house where my parents held their 1949 wedding reception. Whether they were of Irish, Portuguese or Italian heritage, these constant reminders were a part of daily life for many of the Lincoln Hilllside children, whose family links went back many generations.

Roast duck

The last sensory image I have of a Lincoln Hillside January was the taste of roast duck. My grandfather had been hunting in Cohasset and Scituate since he was a young boy. He and a hunting friend, usually Lou Bailey, would rise so early that they would be dressed, go hunting and be back by 7:30am ready for a full day's work. A platter filled with that rich dark meat was the succulent centerpiece of many Sunday feasts. Hunting was my grandfather's favorite winter pastime. He and his Cohasset hunting friends looked forward each year to the time when duck hunting season began. I recall with no distaste or discomfort admiring the beautiful ducks he'd shot; their sleek fat breasts, the delicate tracings in their webbed feet and the way their head feathers seems to turn from blue to green depending on the angle at which I stood. When my grandfather passed away the only item I took from his house was his little canvas hunting cap with his hunting license pinned to the back. It carried his scent and although it was inanimate, I have no doubt that woven somewhere in its soiled threads were happy moments of cold companionship sitting in duck blinds with Lou Bailey and other hunting friends of years past.

Today's children of Cohasset may be enjoying winter activities that may be slightly different than the ones we enjoyed 40 years ago, but I have no doubt their experience and happiness is as rich and full as ours was. I wish them all a Happy New Year.

Kathleen O'Donnell, a CHS graduate, grew up in Cohasset and now lives and works in the UK with her family. Her reflections about growing up on Lincoln Hillside appear occasionally in the Cohasset Mariner.

Always listen to your mother

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

One thing you have to say about the Bush boys, father and son, George (41) and George (43) — they don't listen to their mothers.

George (43) learned the folly of his ways the other day when he went to the mattress with a rebellious pretzel and came out with a bruised cheekbone and a fat lip for his pains.

"If my mother is listening, 'Mother, I should have listened to you: Always chew your pretzels before you swallow,'" he said.

This compares favorably with what George (41) had to say when he was caught sneaking his side dish of broccoli under the table to his dog, Millie, at dinner.

"I do not like broccoli and I haven't liked it since I was a little kid and my mother made me eat it," he said. "And I'm president of the United States, and I'm not going to eat any more broccoli."

Myself, I didn't like broccoli at first when I was a kid.

George (41)'s blunt response so thrilled the farmers of America that the California broccoli growers dispatched a caravan with 10 tons of broccoli to 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

And right there on television in our very living rooms, Julia Child herself whipped up a brand new dish that featured blanched broccoli sautéed in olive oil and garlic.

I would have tried the recipe, but I never could make out what Julia was mumbling about.

So far, I haven't seen where the pretzel growers of California have sent even a small package of pretzels to George (43), and what could Julia Child do with a blanched pretzel?

Barbara Bush, the wife of George (41) and the mother of George (43), said she loves broccoli, although she has yet to make a public announcement of her feelings about pretzels.

Under the probing questions of the press, however, she did let slip that she could not stand pork skins, which she disclosed was the favorite pig-out food of George (41).

Myself, I didn't like broccoli at first when I was a kid.

This was because my father once cautioned me never to eat anything I couldn't spell.

Once I had mastered the "Cs" (2) and the "Ls" (1), I found that it wasn't bad at all.

I lost whatever taste I may have had for pork skins on a trip to pre-Castro Havana, where they were eaten like potato chips with a glass of Carta Blanca for a chaser.

The Cubans also snack on refried beans, and fried baby bananas are considered a delicacy, although Fidel may have since changed their tastes along with their quality of life.

George (43)'s bout with the pretzel involved a snack that, according to his doctors, "went down the wrong way," striking a nerve that caused his heart to skip a beat and rendering him momentarily unconscious.

He was alone at the time, watching the Baltimore Ravens-Miami Dolphins football game on television.

I was watching the very same game, but I had a bowl of popcorn along with my glass of merlo and I survived uninjured.

I used to tell people it was a bad pretzel, too.

Reconnecting with the soul of Cohasset

NATURAL VIEW

JIM SHIPSKY

I'd like you to get into a natural state of mind while reading this column. It will feel really good. Turn off all the electronic gadgets that might interrupt you. Sit back, relax, and allow your tense muscles to just let go. Notice how your body feels where your chair, or whatever, supports you. (If you're reading this while sitting on a rock under the sky, award yourself extra credit.) Become aware of your breathing for several cycles. Let yourself feel where the air passes in and out of you. Maybe you'll notice it in your nose, throat, chest or lungs. Be aware this life-sustaining air is Nature. Nature moves in and out of your lungs every moment of your life. Now prepare to be with the right side of your brain, and, when you're ready, visualize with me a little movie about Cohasset.

SCENARIO:

7,000 years ago: the glacier covering Cohasset finally melts, and plants little by little green the land. White pines and oaks take root. Lush mosses and ferns sprout and decay in endless cycles. Wildlife returns. Cohasset becomes a New England Garden of Eden. Close your eyes and see this heaven, this virgin ecosystem.

5,000 years ago?: the Indians arrive, or return, to take up residence in Cohasset. They summer along the beautiful seacoast, enjoying fish, shellfish, waterfowl, and lying out in the warm sun. They move inland during the winters, wisely avoiding Nor'easters. They are in touch with the soul of Earth. They feel the Earth owns them. They leave the ecosystem intact.

1600s: Whites settle in Cohasset, eventually forcing out all the Indians. They begin altering the ecosystem.

1700s: Whites divide up all the land in Cohasset, declaring it private property. All except for the Town Common, a remnant of English Common Law and the biblical idea of common wealth. Expanding farms nibble away at the ecosystem.

1800s: The population of Cohasset increases. Trees, many 300 years old, are clear-cut for farming, lumber, and firewood. Large portions of ecosystem are destroyed. I've seen a photograph of the harbor area of this period with nary a tree in sight. In 1848 a railroad connects Cohasset to Boston via Weymouth. In 1898 E. Victor Bigelow foretold: "The character of this town as a suburb and summer resort, to the exclusion of industries, has become fixed. A fair estimate of the future for at least a century must predict for Cohasset a suburban retirement." ("Narrative History of Cohasset," p 538.) Still a strong sense of Nature remains throughout the town, and Cohasset possesses a strong sense of place. Individuals build homes and businesses for themselves, using processes and patterns that nurture life and spirit (nurtures soul).

1900s: Cohasset loses much of its identity as an independent town, becoming one of Boston's many dormitory towns. Real estate speculators begin chopping farms into faceless little tract developments. Characterless houses from plan books are built for no one in particular. Toward the end of the century, offensive trophy houses become de rigueur. People become virtually 100 percent cut off from the soul of Cohasset, the soul of Earth. The ecosystem is dealt a cruel blow, and is in rapid decline. Woodlands, wildlife, rock ledge, water, soil, silence and air are being destroyed or rendered toxic. A threshold has been crossed. Hardly anyone notices.

While preventing the worst abuses, our regulations fail utterly to help us in any proactive manner.

2000s: A few brave souls admit all is not well in Cohasset, and it's rapidly getting worse. Out of control, in fact. In deep concern, if not desperation, the Selectmen launch an attempt to find a healthier way. It's called a Master Planning Process. It doesn't dare say that what's missing in Cohasset's present and future is soul. Someone needs to say it and put it on the table for discussion. So I'm saying it now. The process and patterns we're now using to shape Cohasset are resulting in dead structures. We can see it all around us. We hunger and thirst for something more whole, but don't know what. Healthy alternatives aren't exactly clamoring for our attention. Even the Growth and Development Committee, in hiring a master planning consultant, may be reduced to selecting a status-quo planner. More of the same. End of movie.

Where did we go so wrong?

Very early all the land of Cohasset was "owned", and subject to a development pattern inherited from England. Just what does the idea of town planning mean if private individuals own all the land in town? Can town planning then mean only restrictions on what these private owners may do with their land? This is precisely what our zoning regulations are — a set of restrictions. While preventing the worst abuses, our regulations fail utterly to help us in any proactive manner. Is there a possibility of town planning where the plan actually facilitates private owners doing the right thing with their property for themselves, for the community, and for Earth?

During the 1800s the patterns used in building Cohasset homes and public buildings resulted in living structures, both physical and social. I can still sense something about the old village buildings and homesteads that feels good, and I suspect those old physical and social structures were alive. But it sure isn't happening any more. Some try to resurrect that old spirit by building historic reproductions (fakes). Cohasset is filling up with buildings of the Colonial, Georgian, and neo-Classical styles. We now have a Pseudo-Colonial auto body shop and a Pseudo-Neo-Classical bank with a drive-up window. This doesn't work. What we get is generic, dead structures, similar to the generic, dead structures proliferating and sprawling everywhere. Can we really be so blind or so in denial that we fail to see how shallow this architectural drek really is?

Another way of looking at our predicament is to look for soul in Cohasset. Our present regulations dealing with land use and town planning, having no belief in the soul, have excluded the soul of the land and the soul of the community. Are there ways a new plan can recognize soul, and help keep us in touch with soul? This excerpt from "Touch The Earth" (T. C. McLuhan, Outerbirdge & Dienstfrey, 1971) expresses how aware of soul the original human residents of Cohasset were:

"We shake down acorns and pine nuts. We don't chop down the trees. We only use dead wood. But the White people plow up the ground, pull down the trees, kill everything. The tree says, 'Don't. I am sore. Don't hurt me.' But they chop it down and cut it up. The spirit of the land hates them. They blast out trees and stir it up to its depths. They saw up the trees. That hurts them. The Indians never hurt anything, but the White people destroy all. They blast rocks and scatter them on the ground. The rock says, 'Don't. You are hurting me.' But the White people pay no attention. How can the spirit of the earth like the White man? . Everywhere the White man has touched it, it is sore."

— an old holy Wintu woman

The master planning process can reintroduce life and spirit (soul) into Cohasset. But first we must, as a community working toward consensus, recognize what we've lost and begin the discussion of how to bring it forward to life. Don't expect to find community soul-nurturing listed under the standard state planning procedures. You won't find it. We need to begin by recognizing what we've lost, recognizing the damage we're doing to Earth, and discovering ways others are adopting to realize the possibility of sustainable living. It's a century filled with possibility!

Local Rotary Club announces phone book drive

The members of the Rotary Club of Cohasset have announced the kick off of their annual Cohasset Phone Book and Buyers Guide drive.

Marking its 39th year, the Rotary Club Cohasset Phone Book has grown to become one of the most popular and widely used community resources. In addition to local phone numbers, residents have come to rely on the publication as a reference for everything from town government information to street map locations.

The Cohasset Phone Book is also viewed as the premiere buyers guide for Cohasset residents in search of goods or services. With low rates and high readership level, an advertisement in the Rotary Club Phone Book makes perfect sense for all local businesses.

All of the advertising dollars generated through the phone book are redirected in the form of support for many local organizations and charitable institutions serving Cohasset citizens. The money also helps fund annual scholarships for high school graduates and current college students.

Persons and organizations interested in finding out more about the benefits of advertising in the Rotary Club Phone Book and Buyers Guide should contact Ed Fox at Fox Associates 781-383-3000.

The Rotary Club of Cohasset is an organization of business and professional leaders united to provide humanitarian service, encourage high ethical standards in all vocations, and help build goodwill and peace in our town, state country and throughout the world. In more than 160 countries worldwide, approximately 1.2 million Rotarians belong to more than 30,000 Rotary clubs.

Democrats to hold caucus in Cohasset

Registered Democrats in Cohasset will be holding a caucus at Cohasset Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave. on Saturday, Feb. 2 at 10 a.m. to elect five delegates and five alternates to the 2002 Massachusetts Democratic Convention to be held on Friday, May 31 and Saturday, June 1 at the Worcester Centrum in Worcester.

The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Cohasset. All candidates may make a two-minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots will be written and secret. All candidates must be present at the caucus to be elected and must consent to nomination in writing. Those not elected as delegate or alternate may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 10 Granite Street, Quincy, MA 02169 no later than ten days after the caucus date.

For more information, please contact Agnes McCann, chairman of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee (781) 383-0222 or the Democratic State Committee at (617) 472-0637.

Get plugged in to utility plan

The Planning Board has scheduled a public hearing at Town Hall for Jan. 30 relative to the underground utility conversion project in Cohasset Village.

Along with Dean Rizzo, executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, the Planning Board will answer any questions and concerns residents may have on the proposed plan.

For underground utilities to become an option, for approximately the next six years Cohasset residents and business owners would have to agree to add $2 a month to an average $100 phone and electric bill, and approximately 90 cents to a monthly cable bill.

Rizzo said if this is something the residents want, now is the time to act.

"If there ever was a time do this, it is now," he said. "While the village is already being dug up, it's not that much more of a cost and effort to have the contractor bury the lines.

In a newsletter sent to residents, the CRC predicted if the work is undertaken in conjunction with the planned village improvements the project will cost about $900,000. However, if the project is done at a later date it would increase the price at least by $500,000.

"Aesthetically, it will open up the beauty of the village," Rizzo said. "As well, if the utility lines are removed from the street it will provide a better flowing pedestrian environment and, will create more parking spaces in some areas."

Short-term measure could alleviate some burden

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

A proposed short-term solution to the School Building Assistance Bureau funding problem is making its way through Beacon Hill.

The bill, cosponsored by state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, aims to extend short-term borrowing from five years, to seven. The reason for the bill is to try and alleviate the financial burden put on taxpayers by the delayed funding of the program.

Cohasset will pay the interest on its loan for a five-year span, however, after five years the town is responsible for the principal. Without reimbursement, this would raise the average tax bill in Cohasset $875 based on a house valued at $500,000.

Michael Buckley, the town's director of finance, explained this bill would help reduce the tax rates by one-third for two years. Currently, Cohasset is short-term borrowing on its $42 million school construction projects. By short-term borrowing, it allows the town to have a lower interest rate and not pay the principal for five years. Beginning in FY04, Cohasset will have a debt service of $2.1 million as opposed to the $3.4 million it would have with long-term, or 20-year borrowing. Buckley agreed with legislators who believe this may only be a quick fix.

"This is a stop-gap solution," Hedlund said. He said the problem will not be fixed unless the state Department of Education funds the projects at its anticipated level of $52 million rather than the current rate of $19 million.

Buckley said if the bill goes through, Cohasset will be paying off its loan for 27 years rather than 25. As well, Buckley said this would be a better solution if the delayed reimbursement was only going to last two years, however, at its current funding rate the reimbursement for the project could be deferred for up to seven.

"Historically, this is an extremely important part of town and any improvements should come in the spirit of the town while maintaining a high level of safety," he said.

While the proposed improvements would not see any construction until around 2004, some were concerned over the lack of funding for the project.

"If none of the money for these improvements comes out of taxes then I'm fine with it," Hill said. "But there a lot of elderly people in this town who can't afford to live here and this would just make it worse."

Rizzo told the residents the CRC will be trying to obtain grants throughout the process so the construction could be done with as little cost to the taxpayers as possible.

According to the CRC, the improvements are intended to:

- Link the various public and private properties along the harbor's edge
- Enhance pedestrian and bicycle safety and convenience
- Facilitate vehicle and pedestrian access through the creation of clear delineation between parking, walking, biking and vehicle travel along Border Street
- Preserve and enliven the rich maritime history of the waterfront
- Develop appropriately scaled public spaces and harbor viewing areas.

The walk would work its way down Margin Street, around Kimball's, and up Border Street to Government Island.

Rizzo said Tuesday he was happy to see such a large group of people at the workshop and felt there were a lot of good points brought up.

"We will continue to meet with advisory groups to convey what was brought up in the workshops and define the parameters involved in putting together a walkway."

School building funding appeal flunks

less time projects must stay on the waiting list for reimbursement, area representatives said. But the DOE didn't appear to be in a receptive mood and granted the town officials only six minutes to speak.

And the response from the DOE was not what those officials wanted to hear.

After listening to state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, outline the effect of the school building assistance cut — DOE Commissioner David Driscoll said he sympathized with the communities' plight but there was little the board could do.

"We recognize the amount of strain, planning and commitment that went in to these projects and we are hoping to right the ship eventually," he said.

Driscoll said the DOE has already submitted its fiscal year 2003 budget to acting Governor Jane Swift for approval and any changes in the funding for next year are unlikely.

Pembroke Town Administrator Ed Thorne said the towns can't give up.

"We are going to have to keep writing letters and coming to meetings until the DOE realizes what a catastrophic effect this will have on taxpayers," he said.

The delay in reimbursement will make a significant dent in the pocketbooks of taxpayers, who will have to make payments on the entire school building mortgage until the state kicks in its share.

For example, in Cohasset that could mean an additional $800-plus a year for the owner of a home valued at $500,000.

While Driscoll said it had been common practice for the DOE to start reimbursing the projects in five years, no promises were ever made.

"There are no sacred cows here," Driscoll said. "We are not making these cuts because we have to, but because we need to."

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said he is disappointed the DOE did not communicate the implications of this change to the towns. He said without Michael Buckley [Cohasset's finance director and Pembroke's town accountant] discovering the funding cuts on the DOE's Web site in December, this matter may have gone unnoticed for longer.

"This was basically like a move in the middle of the night," Koed said.

Rob Spofford, chairman of Cohasset's School Building Committee, said the DOE did not realize the promises local governments made to taxpayers assuring the residents their taxes would not rise dramatically due to school construction projects.

"I sat before Town Meeting twice and told them this funding was a sacred cow," he said about Cohasset's $42 million projects. "By this course of action you are going to kill this program and we will never be able to get an operational override again."

Hedlund and Bradley said they will continue to try to garner more legislative support for this cause.

"We want to work with other legislators whose districts are impacted," Hedlund said. "This isn't going to just go away."

He said it seemed unlikely the DOE was going to take any immediate action based upon the hearing on Tuesday.

"I left the meeting with the same feelings I had before I entered," Hedlund said. "Our presentation was met with blank stares."

Town Manager Mark Haddad was irked the town officials and local legislators had so little time to present their case.

"We had to wait two months to having a hearing before the board and they gave us six minutes, that's very unprofessional," he said.

Incumbents pull nomination papers

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Incumbents once again ruled the day as five residents pulled nomination papers last week indicating they will be seeking reelection on their chosen board.

Glenn Pratt, 482 King St., plans to run for reelection on the Water Commission.

Recreation Commissioner Mary K. Muncey, 377 S. Main St., is looking to serve another term and, Planning Board Chairman Al Moore, hopes to keep his seat and will be running again.

On the Board of Health, Robin Lawrence intends to seek reelection and Town Clerk Marion Douglas will also be looking to serve another term.

The following residents pulled papers earlier in the month indicating their desire to run for office.

Jane Pescatore of Lantern Lane plans to run for the open seat on the school committee being vacated by Stephanie Noble, who is not seeking reelection.

Mary Granville, 100 Beach St., will seek a seat on the Board of Assessors.

Roger Lowe, also of 100 Beach St., plans to run for reelection to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees and, Roger Q. Hill, 17A Highland Ave., intends to run for an open position on the Board of Selectmen.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Fred Koed both plan to run again for their seats on the Board of Selectmen.

Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees Sheila Evans and Roger Whitley are looking to serve another term. Ralph Perroncello, 10 Pleasant St., hopes to keep his seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority and Town Moderator George Marlette pulled papers for another term.

Two candidates are officially on the ballot after collecting the required 50 signatures from residents. Mary Granville and Roger Lowe are the first two citizens to be placed on the ballot. Granville is seeking a seat on the Board of Assessors while Lowe is looking to retain his position as a Paul Pratt Memorial Library trustee.

The last day to pick up the papers is Feb. 14 and all papers need to be returned by Feb. 19. To be put on the ballot, a candidate must garner 50 signatures from registered voters. Annual Town Election will be on April 6.

said about resolving sewer issues. Roberts said AvalonBay is also working on a project in Weymouth that required "a substantial amount of work" by upgrading the existing sewer system.

Avalon is spending upwards of $2 million to replace 3,700 linear feet that make up one of the Weymouth's three main sewer trunk lines for Avalon Ledges, a 304-unit project. The sewer upgrade was a condition attached to the comprehensive permit granted Avalon by the Weymouth Zoning Board of Appeals.

Under Chapter 40B, the state affordable housing law, developers can file for a comprehensive permit that allows them to skirt local zoning regulations if they set aside 20-25 percent of the units as affordable housing. But the ZBA can set conditions or deny the application. The developer has the right to appeal to the state.

Selectmen met with the Zoning Board of Appeals last week and Town Counsel Rick Hucksam to go over the complex law, also dubbed the "Anti-Snob Zoning Act," to get a better understanding of what the town might be facing.

The size and scope of AvalonBay and the fact it will be built on one of the town's last tracks of industrially zoned land make it controversial.

Hucksam declined to answer any questions directed specifically toward AvalonBay, and instead tried to educate those in attendance about 40B. He said a town like Cohasset has little chance of stopping a developer and would be better served to negotiate.

"We heard loud and clear that the ZBA should take the concerns of the town and try to come to a mutual agreement with a developer," Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said.

In a packet given to all in attendance, Hucksam said compromise and negotiation are integral to the 40B process.

"Appeals of ZBA decisions generally support the developer, not the town, so working with the developer is beneficial in the process," he said.

Residents voiced concerns over the proposed development being placed on one of the town's last tracks of undeveloped industrially zoned land and its proximity to the watershed..

Hucksam said the Conservation Commission and Board of Health could conduct separate hearings on the permit process but typically, acts as consultants to the ZBA. Those hearings should be held before the ZBA hearing process begins.

Once Avalon files for a comprehensive permit, the ZBA has 30 days to start negotiations.. The town is vulnerable to the comprehensive permit process because it has so little affordable housing by state standards.

Chapter 40B imposes a quota of 10 percent of year-round housing units for affordable housing. To qualify such housing must be subsidized by a state, federal or local agency. Housing occupied by low-income families without direct subsidy does not count. The most recent survey of Cohasset housing showed the town has 2,752 units and of those only 76 or 2.76 percent qualify as affordable under Chapter 40B.

Lecture series

On Thursday, Feb. 7, at 7 p.m., the Hull Lifesaving Museum at 1117 Nantasket Ave. in Hull will continue its Winter Lecture Series with "Dories of Massachusetts Bay," a presentation by Gary Kissal, curator at the Marblehead Dory and Schooner Museum.

An ancient boat type, prized for its astonishing seaworthiness and versatility, the dory is the ancestor of most small, open-water rowing boats in the North Atlantic basin. Mr. Kissal will discuss the boat's many types and uses, as well as its historical significance in the New England fishing industry. The lecture will be held in the midst of our ongoing small-craft exhibit.

Light refreshments will be served. Admission is $3 for museum-members and $5 for non-members. For more information, call Museum Director, Corinne Leung at 781-925-5433; or visit their Web site at www.hullmuse@channell.com.

The Cohasset wrestling team served up some quality home cooking Saturday, taking third place in a field of 13 teams at its own tourney.

To no one's surprise, Duxbury dominated the field at the 11th annual Cohasset High School Wrestling tournament, placing nine wrestlers in the finals and coming away with six champions. The Green Dragons finished with 261 points, well ahead of Lynnfield's 118. But little Cohasset High managed to finish just behind larger Lynnfield High with 108 points, which was also 4.5 points ahead of perennial power Rockland.

"I was thrilled with our overall performance," gushed veteran Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "We've had a lot of wrestlers really step it up over the last few weeks, and that was really appar-

Things going smooth as ice

C.H.S. hockey team continues dominant ways

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Given the exorbitant price of for game-time ice, there aren't many acceptable excuses for teams not doing their utmost to get their full money's worth. If you're a coach, you obviously want your team going full bore full-time.

But what's a sportsman like Cohasset hockey coach Dennis Walsh supposed to do when his team is regularly putting games out of reach before they're even half over?

Long answer short: the Cohasset High hockey players are becoming masters in the ageless game of keep-away.

After senior defenseman Eric Libby only semi-intentionally put the Skippers up 9-0 with a wicked slapshot from the point 7:48 into the second period of Saturday's night tilt with Hull, Walsh orders his troops to go into full keep-away mode.

It was clear before the second period reached the five minute mark that the boys in blue and white have this drill down to a fine science. Obviously, they've had more than enough time to practice it, having now outscored their nine opponents on the season by a total of 83-8, this while building an 8-0-1 record.

And they gave their home fans quite a show. Greg O'Connell, Matt Davis, Tom Anderson, Tim Straughn and Eric Libby were particularly impressive in continually cycling and recycling the puck in Hull's end. There were several stretches for a minute or more in Hull's end when no Pirates player even touched the puck.

"You don't like to run up a score on an opponent," explained Walsh, in his 30th and final year of walking the Cohasset High bench. "It can come back to haunt you, plus it's just not good sportsmanship. It's not the way you want to teach your players."

Being a glass is half full kind of mentor, however, Walsh feels his team can take something from this hockey version of the four corners offense.

"We're a good passing team, and this can only make us better," said Walsh. "We're moving the puck well while we're stalling, so it's good practice."

Walsh also made sure he emptied his bench early, as the Skippers took a 5-0 lead before the break, and got it

Boys hoop team (5-8) now behind 8-ball in post-season push

The boys basketball team engaged in their first and only true "road trip" of the season, coming away with mixed results.

Although the Skippers were taken down by a surprisingly powerful Harwich squad Friday, they got the better of Nantucket on Saturday.

The Skippers left for the Cape Friday afternoon, and did not return until late the next day, after playing two games and enduring hours of travel. The one win and one loss left the Skippers dangerously close to elimination from the playoff picture, but eleventh year coach Ron Ford liked having his team come together around a unique experience like this.

The tradition of going overnight for two weekend games had been dormant in Cohasset for a few years, but Ford resurrected it to fit another Div. 4 opponent into the schedule.

Against Harwich, the Rough Ryders jumped on the road-weary visitors, coming away with a 64-45 win. Ford continues to show concern at his team's lack of offense against other South Shore League teams, as it is averaging well under 50 points a game in SSL competition.

"That's a team that has been playing very well," noted Ford of the Harwich squad, which should be one of the strongest contenders come Div 4 playoff time. "They are fundamentally better than us. They are going to be tough to beat."

The Rough Ryders were led by junior Adam Rose, the coach's

Lady Skippers sink Pirates

O'Brien buzzer-beater lifts C.H.S. hoopsters past Hull

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

"It was wonderful. They played together beautifully."

C.H.S. girls basketball coach Ellen Carr after 57-55 buzzer beating win over Hull

In sports, nothing feels greater than narrowly beating a rival team on your home floor. So one might well assume the Lady Skippers felt better than great when they slipped by Hull on Tuesday, 57-55.

The win marked Cohasset's second in a week, after they toasted Sturgiss Charter School last Wednesday. Even though the Lady Skippers got knocked down a peg by Harwich two days later, they rebounded for a tremendous win over their bitter foes to the north.

The Lady Pirate commanded the tempo of the game early on, employing their very disciplined, slow-moving halfcourt set offense to counteract Cohasset's aggressive 1-3-1 zone. With their lead stretching as far as seven, Hull proceeded to commit six turnovers on seven possessions to let their hosts crawl back into it.

Cohasset took their momentum into halftime, finding themselves down only 28-25. They came out of the locker rooms with new fire, rattling off a 12-2 run before the Lady Pirates could call timeout.

The Lady Skippers held onto a single-digit lead all through the second half, until Hull long range threat Christine Sampson banged home a three-pointer to give her team a 51-50 advantage. Sampson finished the game with 13 points, nine from beyond the arc.

Cohasset junior Maura O'Brien closed out the game by scoring five of her team's final seven points, capping an unbelievable second half. She had 21 points in this contest, her second highest output of the season, behind a 22-point outing against Scituate. In the second half alone, O'Brien recorded 15 of her points, and 10 of her 14 rebounds.

Another key play down the stretch for Cohasset was when junior Lindsay Grossman stole an inbounds pass with the score tied, and converted a layup for a 55-53

C.H.S. gymnastics star continues to dominate for 6-0 Cohasset-Norwell squad

The Norwell/Cohasset gymnastics team remained perfect on the season (6-0, 3-0), notching relatively easy wins over Notre Dame and the joint Plymouth North/Plymouth South team.

And Cohasset High senior Kristin Sheerin remained herself near perfect, winning her fifth and sixth all-around competition in succession on the season.

In Wednesday's 128-121.1 win over Notre Dame, Sheerin won all four events to come away with a score of 35.6 in the all-around. Sophomore classmate Meredith Bixby finished with a solid score of 32 for all four events to finish second overall.

Sheerin, who already holds every C.H.S. gymnastics record, scored a 9.3 on the floor exercise, 9.1 on the beam, 8.7 on the vault and 8.5 on the uneven bars. This Pilgrim Conference 2 win improved the C-N girls squad to 3-0 in league action.

The Cohasset-Norwell squad broke its all-time record on Friday with a total score of 129.9 to easily best the joint Plymouth team (118.8 points) in non-league action.

Bixby finished with a career best in the all-around of 33.25 to notch second place honors again.

Sheerin took home top honors with a 9.2 on the floor, 8.9 on the beam, 8.85 on the vault and 8.5 on the bars—good for an all-around score of 35.45.

COASTAL STARS REPORT

With the indictment in the Junta murder trial, hockey families have been forced to defend the game they love so much and decry the violence that at times accompany overzealous fans.

As a local hockey program that is a member of USA hockey program nationally and the South Shore and Yankee Conferences locally, the Coastal Stars feel it is important for parents to know what steps have been implemented to eliminate violence in the stands.

It was in the wake of Junta beating a man to death outside a hockey rink in Reading, the South Shore Conference (SSC) passed an ordinance, Rule 16A, obligating every parent watching a USA hockey sanctioned game to maintain a certain level of conduct or be subject to suspension or banishment. The spirit behind this rule is to quell the level of furor that can lead to criminal acts. Now, the loudmouth idiot screaming relentlessly at little Johnnie to pass the puck will not be covered under this rule. What will be considered an offense is screaming at officials, coaches, other parents and anything deemed to be threatening, antagonistic, and abusive.

If there is a violation of this Rule, the South Shore Conference Discipline Committee will investigate and, if necessary, conduct a hearing. The Coastal Stars Organization fully supports the SSC's efforts to eliminate unruly conduct through the enactment of Rule 16A and will cooperate with the Conference fully in all its efforts to punish any offenders. As such, the Board of the Coastal Stars has set up a Discipline Committee that will act as the initial arbiter in any reports of abuse and then will pass along their findings to the SSC Disciplinary Committee.

The sad reality that adults, parents, authority figures have allowed their conduct to degenerate so drastically that a rule like this is even needed is regrettable. What has happened? What have we become? Why is the result of a youth sporting event so important that we scream, threaten and sometimes abuse our kids, our coaches and one another?

Something has happened in sports over the last few years. Sports, particularly youth sports, used to be played for fun and the thrill of competition. As sports have become more of a business than a recreation, the status of the athlete has evolved from that of a vaunted everyman warrior to a pampered untouchable celebrity. Sport stars and movie stars have become interchangeable - they all fall under the category of entertainers and as such, they are paid the same way, promoted the same way and are idolized the same way. Ask any one of your kids to list their ten heroes and notice how many athletes appear on the list. Sports are no longer that win for the gipper character forming enterprise, sports for some has become a means to an end. A means to fame, a means to riches, a means to a good prep school, a means to a good college, a means to show up a neighbor, a means to everything but good healthy competition.

Once we treat sports as a means to some kind of end for our children, then our outlook changes from a disinterested supporter to a vested stakeholder in the vision we have set forth for them. As such, each game is intense not just in its potential outcome but in how it might affect the means we hope to see realized. If an official makes a call or a coach makes a judgment that might impact, even in a small way, that vision then they could become the object of the vested parents wrath and fury. This is what triggers some otherwise normal respectable parents to become fanatical nuts once little Johnnie or Jannie steps on the ice.

The vast majority of parents are good, well intended parents, who through the love of their children, support them in all their activities. Most parents scream, yell, implore because emotion that each game brings with it. This is the supportive, screaming we hear echoing through the rinks from late August to early April. It is the abusive and threatening language that occasionally punctures those loving screams of support that Rule 16A hopes to permanently silence.

son, who scored 17 points. The Bilodeau brothers, Matt and Chris, led the Skippers with 17 and 15 points, respectively.

The Skippers felt the absence of their normal starting center, sophomore Sean Connolly, against a Harwich team that consistently posted their tall guards. Junior Ian Kidder did all he could to fill the role in the paint, but at 6-foot-1, the Rough Ryders' inside game proved to be too much.

Kidder turned it around the next day, though, leading his team to a much needed victory over the Whalers, 67-50. Kidder tallied 18 points, 10 rebounds, and a ridiculous eight blocks, by far his most productive game of the year.

Chris Bilodeau continued his role as one the main offensive threats on the team with 12 points, as he seems to be fully recovered from the finger injury that sidelined him the first few weeks of the season.

"He has settled in nicely," affirmed coach Ford. "I expected him to be one of our top scorers."

Harwich is the only Div. 4 opponent the Skippers have lost to so far, but Cohasset now stands in the SSL basement with an 0-6 league record.

The Skippers will need some consistency down the stretch to turn things around, something of which they have not had much. Ron Ford, the self-proclaimed Jimy Williams of Cohasset High, has gone with the same starting line-up only twice.

Roster cards will continue to be shaken up, with the possibility of senior captain Liam Martin's return from injury still on Ford's mind.

The junior varsity squad won both their games on the trip, their first two wins of the year. It has been a rough year for the JV squad of six players (that's right, barely enough for a starting line-up on some games), and the pair of victories added a nice touch to the weekend.

Boys hoop notes

A 47-45 setback to SSL and Div. 4 rival Hull on Monday dealt a considerable blow to the Skippers post-season chances, dropping them to 5-8. Two key free throws from Hull's Luis Andrade to break the tie with 5.6 seconds remaining may have stuck the dagger into Cohasset.

Three more losses in their final seven games and the Skippers are out of post-season. This remaining slate includes rematches with SSL powerhouses Abington, Norwell and Carver, each of whom handled Cohasset pretty handily in the initial go-round.

lead. She had 20 points by the end of the game, while dishing out seven assists.

After the Grossman steal, Sampson drove past the fullcourt pressure to convert a lay-in, knotting the score up at 55.

With seven seconds to work with, Cohasset junior point guard LaRaine Langford dumped the ball off to Grossman, who found O'Brien open under the basket for a buzzer-beating jumper.

"It was wonderful," said elated Skippers' coach Ellen Carr right after the game. "They played together beautifully."

Sophomore Danielle Pinkus had a terrific game in the paint, finishing up with 12 points, 12 boards and six blocks.

The junior varsity destroyed their Lady Pirates counterparts, 42-16, being led by freshman center Casey Anderson and varsity swinger Jen Buckley.

The win the varsity had previous to Tuesday looked exactly as it should have: a solid Div. 4 team taking on a tiny Charter School in its first year of varsity existence. The Lady Skippers rolled to victory 60-31.

Cohasset controlled everything in the game, using their big early lead to try out some different offenses and defenses.

"We were playing a lot of man-to-man," explained Carr. "We were working on new things."

Grossman scored 22, while junior guard Heather Peraino threw in 15.

Last Friday, Cohasset endured a tough loss, this one at the hands of Harwich, 59-34. A new member of the South Shore League, the LAdy Rough Ryders have quite an impressive team that, like their boys team, should prove a top contender in the Div. 4 State Tourney.

Harwich enjoyed the return of their star scorer Sharee Deluze, who knocked down 20 points. She had missed the first six weeks of the season, but having her back was a key component to Harwich's success.

O'Brien was the only Lady Skipper to crack double digits, tallying 10 points.

Although the loss put a dark mark on the last week, the two wins put Cohasset at a very respectable 5-8. Carr's stated pre-season goal of six wins seems more than attainable.

"We are starting to make that transition," affirmed the coach, who had one win last year, hopes for six this year and is on record with a call for 10 next winter. "The girls never give up and I am proud of them at the end of every game."

ent on Saturday.

"To finish ahead of some great teams like Marshfield and Rockland, even though they were missing a few kids, was a real thrill for our guys."

The Skippers advanced five grapplers to the semifinals, with junior Terry Baroudi moving all the way to the Championship match at 137 pounds, where he lost to Duxbury star Scott Klebanoff in a heartbreaker,6-5, to finish second in the weight class. This was the third meeting this season between these two mighty mites, with Klebanoff now holding the 2-1 advantage.

"They've got a nice rivalry going there and they should meet at least one more time in the sectionals," said Sweeney. "Hopefully, Terry will even the score there."

Falling short for the Skippers in the semifinals, but still earning invaluable points were senior captain Phil Strazzulla at 121 pounds, and three freshmen: Jon Littauer at 105 pounds, Joey Kehoe at 114 and Matt Baroudi at 191.

Strazzulla was pinned by Duxbury's Ian McConnaughey 2:25 into the match, which was just 1:34 less than he needed to put away Rockland's Zach Gorman in the finals. The Cohasset senior battled back to get a double overtime win in the consolation semi-finals, though, to finish third. He also had two pins on the day.

Littauer, who had three pins on the day, appears to be following in the footsteps of a big brothers Dan (a senior standout currently out of action with an elbow injury). John lost in the semifinals to Hull's Rob Smolansky on points, but he too rallied to finish third with a consolation win.

Kehoe was pinned by eventual champion Jeff Byron, another of the Duxbury standouts, but recorded his third pin of the day in the consolation match to take third place honors. Kehoe actually wound up wrestling teammate Vinnie Gratta for third place. Gratta fought his way up through the consolation round ranks to earn the shot at his teammate. Of course, no points were awarded to Cohasset for Gratta's fourth place finish, as teams are not allowed to have multiple scorers in weight classes.

Matt Baroudi, Terry's "little" brother, did a commendable job of hanging in against a more seasoned wrestler in Duxbury's Elmo Roberts in the semis at 191 pounds before falling on points, 7-3. The frosh also fell in a close consolation match to finish fourth.

It's unusual for any wrestler to lose a first round match and battle back to place, but the Cohasset team had two grapplers follow this course. Both Chris McKenna (147 pounds) and Mike Casey (173) took three straight wins after opening round defeats to finish third in their respective weight classes.

McKenna lost to Marshfield's Craig Adjemian in the first round, scrapped back to take two pins and then beat Adjemian on points in the match for third place honors.

Casey, likewise, recorded a couple of consolation round pins before wrapping up a third place win.

Other Cohasset notables included freshman Matt Casey taking a tough win in the 142 pound division and John Hussey losing a pair of one-point heartbreakers to the third and fourth seeds at 217 pounds.

The Skippers were scheduled to face off at home last night with Norwell. A win here would lift them to 4-0 in the Pilgrim Conference 2, and provide huge implications for next Wednesday's showdown at Carver— 3-1, with the one loss coming to the only other unbeaten team in conference, Rockland. Cohasset is scheduled to faceoff with Rockland in what could be a winner-take-all match on Feb. 2 at Middleboro High School.

"If you had told me a few weeks ago that we'd have a chance at a league title, I'd have said your crazy, but we've really had a lot of young guys progress," said Sweeney. "It's nice to be in this position."

The Skippers host a good tune-up quad-meet this Saturday (10 a.m. start), with bigger schools Durfee, Wayland and Whitman-Hanson coming into town.

to 9-0 in short order in the second.

Greg O'Connell (goal, four assists) started the onslaught with a quick wrister from just in front of the left circle off some nice quick puck movement. The assists went to Straughn (2 assists) and Anderson, who added further to his team best scoring totals with two goals in the game.

The other goals were scored by Davis, Dave Bouchard Mike Devine, Pete Whoriskey, Rob Carpenter, Libby and Mike Rasmussen. The first three players also had an assist apiece. Chris Caron contributed with two assists, while Ted Straughn and Will Moody added one apiece.

Hull finished the game with three shots, all coming from long distance, to Cohasset's 38. Of course, 27 of those came in the first period.

The hometown boys took their game of keep-away on the road for a Monday afternoon holiday matinee, as they jumped out to a quick lead against Harwich at Moore Arena in Orleans on the way to a 9-0 win.

O'Connell continued to pad his stats with another five point outburst (goal, four assists). The junior, who led the Skippers in scoring last season with 27 points, is already up to 23 points (10 goals, 13 assists) a game before the midway point. After a slow start (relative to Cohasset standards), O'Connell has climbed all the way to third in the SSL scoring race, behind teammates Anderson (16-10—26), who added to his team best goal total on Monday with a pair, and Norwell's Rob Himberg (14-14—28)

Junior winger John Durkin had two goals and two assists in the Harwich whitewashing, while Carpenter added a tally and a helper.

Senior goalie Dan Kinchla split the time in net with freshman Brendan Michaud.

Kinchla sports an SSL best 0.889 goals against average, more than two goals per game under second place Kevin O'Sullivan of Abington-East Bridgewater.

Hockey notes

By the time anyone reads this, the Skippers will have faced their biggest test of the season to date, a Wednesday night showdown with defending Div. 3 state champion Hanover.

Cohasset and Hanover were long-time South Shore League rivals up until this year's realignment. Now, the Indians have moved up to the Patriot League and Division 2.

Now, it's a non-league game that Walsh says should reveal a lot about the true makeup of his team.

Third quarter tax bills issued

The Town of Cohasset has issued the Fiscal Year 2002 third quarter tax bills due Feb. 1. Anyone who has not received their tax bill should contact the Board of Assessors at 781-383-4102 for a copy of the tax bill.

The fiscal 2002 total tax is based on the new fiscal 2002 assessment. The new assessments are based on sales market activity during calendar 2000 and early 2001 to reflect the value of real estate as of Jan. 1, 2001.

Tax payers who feel that their property is over assessed and want to contest their assessment must file for and abatement with the Board of Assessors by 1 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 1.

Real Estate tax exemptions are available to qualifying elderly, widows, blind persons, and veterans with a 10 percent service connected disability or greater.

The sewer betterments for both the north (NSWR) and central (CSWR) sewer projects are included on this bill. The total amount of the apportioned sewer betterment to be paid during this fiscal year is shown on the tax bill under the "special assessment" section. The amount due also includes accrued 1 percent interest on the unpaid principal betterment balance. The total amount due is split between the third and fourth quarter payments. The amount due is included in the total due Feb. 1, line show at the bottom right of tax bill.

The tax bill also contains the Community Preservation Act (CPA) 1.5 percent surcharge. The total CPA surcharge due for the full fiscal year is shown next to the Community Preservation Act line on the tax bill. The surcharge is calculated as follows: FY2002 Assessment - $100,000 (residential exemption) x $11.48 (tax rate)/1000 = gross taxes subject to surcharge. Gross taxes subject to surcharge - FY2002 exemptions approved by assessors, if applicable = net taxes subject to surcharge. - Net taxes subject to surcharge x .015 (1.5 percent CPA surcharge) = Total CPA surcharge. Total FY2002 CPA surcharge - Preliminary surcharge/2 = surcharge Feb. 1, and May 1. The amount due is included in the total due Feb. 1, line shown at the bottom right of tax bill. There are exemptions for qualified low income and elderly property owner. Contact the board of assessors at 781-383-4114 for details.

Finally, enclosed with the tax bills is an insert that allows taxpayers to make voluntary contributions to the scholarship, education and elderly/disabled funds established a few years ago.

Scholarship fund will provide secondary school tuition assistance to deserving town residents. these funds will be in addition to scholarships currently available to the town residents.

Educational fund will provide supplemental educational funding for the Cohasset Public Schools. Additionally, funds may be used for existing adult literacy programs.

Elderly disabled fund will provide property tax relief for elderly and disabled Cohasset taxpayers who meet specific criteria established by the elderly/disabled fund committee.

Awards for the above funds will be made once there are sufficient funds available.

OBITUARIES

Richard S. McLaughlin

Richard S. McLaughlin, 65 years old, of Cohasset, died Jan. 16, 2002 at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

He had lived in Cohasset for 13 years and previously in Marshfield

Born in New Haven, Conn., he graduated from Hillhouse High School and New Haven State College in New Haven, Conn.

Mr. McLaughlin was a self-employed building contractor in the South Shore.

He served in the U.S. Marines.

He leaves his mother, Lilian McLaughlin of Arlington, Texas; his two sons, Sean McLaughlin of South Dennis and Scott McLaughlin of Pembroke; his two daughters, Kate McLaughlin of Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif. and Erin McLaughlin of Hamden, Conn.; his two grandsons, Paul Nolan and Joseph McLaughlin.; innumerable friends, loved ones and extended family.

Funeral services were private. Arrangements were made by the MacDonald Funeral Home, Route 139 in Marshfield.

Contributions to Mr. McLaughlin's memory may be made to Pivot Ministries, 495 Jane St., Bridgeport, Conn. 06608.

Jane B. Gillingham

Jane B. Gillingham, 77, of Scituate, formerly of Norwell and Cohasset, died unexpectedly Jan. 15, 2002, at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Born in Cohasset, she later moved to Norwell and Scituate where she has lived for 40 years. She was educated in the Norwell Public Schools, graduating from Norwell High School. She also attended Perry Normal Kindergarten School in Boston where she received a degree in teaching. She was a first-grade teacher in the Scituate Public Schools for 34 years. Mrs. Gillingham was one of the first teachers in the New Hatherly School and continued there until her retirement in 1985.

She was a member of the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

An avid Bruin and Red Sox fan, she also enjoyed boating.

She leaves a daughter, Linda J. Farley, two granddaughters, Michelle L. Coles and Deloris J. Farley, and a great-grandson, Christian J. Castelli, all of Plymouth; and many cousins and dear friends.

A funeral service was held at the Richardson Gaffey Funeral Home, Scituate. Interment will be at a date and time to be announced.

Pasta at St. Anthony's

St. Anthony Parish's fourth annual "Pasta with the Pastah" will be held at 6:30 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 2 in the parish hall. The dinner is sponsored by the Lagrotteria family and friends. Tickets are $20 and $15 for seniors. Call the parish office at 781-383-0219.

On Sunday, Feb. 3 at the 9:30 a.m. Mass, the Rite of Welcoming ceremony will be held for the four candidates taking part in the parish RCIA program. This program, the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults, prepares people to enter the Catholic Church, usually during the Easter Vigil. RCIA will next meet on Monday, Jan. 28 from 7-8:30 p.m. in the parish center.

Also, World Marriage Day will be celebrated at the 5 p.m. Mass on Saturday, Feb. 9 for parishoners celebrating their first, fifth, 10th, 15th, 20th, 25th, 50th, and any 50-plus wedding anniversary in 2002. A reception will be held following the Mass in the parish rectory. Register by calling the parish office. Widows and widowers who would like the memory of their marriage commitment honored are also invited and encouraged to attend.

Many fine citizens were nominated for annual award

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Twenty-seven individuals and families nominated a total of seven different people for The Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year Award. This is the ninth consecutive year the Cohasset Mariner has sponsored the annual recognition of a local citizen.

After poring over the numerous letters and nomination forms, a committee of four consisting of editor Mary Ford, Town Manager Mark Haddad, Jennifer Piepenbrink of 622 CJC Hwy., and Osborne Ingram of 274 Beechwood St. selected Glenn Pratt of 482 King St. as Citizen of the Year.

Pratt joins prior year citizens, the late Gerard Keating, Joseph D. Buckley, Dr. Robert Sceery, the Rev. Gary Ritts, Anna Abbruzzese, Katherine Stanton, the late Clark Chatterton, and Mary Jeanette Murray.

Some candidates received multiple nominations. Although the number of nominations an individual receives was not a criterion for the award – all letters and nominations forms submitted were carefully read and considered.

Nominees could be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, firefighter, police officer or other municipal worker; a person in the business community, sports figure or an 'unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

The other nominees for this year's award included:

• Herbert Jason, lobsterman, for his many contributions to the maritime history of Cohasset including his efforts to get the Wilson and Antoine Memorial built and installed on Government Island, his work with the Minot Light Replica, for helping to start the Massachusetts Lobstermen's Association, and for continuing to try to better the town in his senior years.

• Arthur Lehr for embodying everything a community should be, through his volunteering with the Boy Scouts, Appalachia Service Project, as Civil Defense Director for the town, election warden, helping to maintain Wheelwright Farm and his immeasurable contributions to Cohasset's recycling efforts that started back in the 1940s.

• Polly Logan for her generosity and countless efforts behind the scenes in innumerable charitable and political causes, for opening her home and her heart to those causes, for spearheading the Cohasset Chapter of the Doric Dames at the Statehouse, and for her efforts in getting women and young people involved in public service.

• Police Chief Brian Noonan for his extraordinary commitment to the community, for his leadership in getting Cohasseters to be better citizens and for introducing his own brand of community policing to the town.

• Bob Thompson for not knowing the word "no" when it comes to helping a neighbor, for his countless hours of volunteer work at the food pantry and for his many years as a marvelous science teacher;

• Jack Worley, who as recreation director has made the recreation department a wonderful asset for the town; for taking on the chairmanship of the Youth Resources Committee; for providing leadership in turning the old DPW garage into the teen center, and for giving his time and energy in all aspects of his service to Cohasset.

Money for a worthwhile cause

Veterans squares need some attention

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Veterans Memorial Committee will ask Town Meeting to appropriate $15,000 toward the repair and upgrade of seven memorials around town.

In light of current world affairs, Glenn Pratt — chairman of the Veterans Memorial Committee — is confident the community will back the request. Selectmen placed the article on the warrant at a meeting earlier this month..

"I think there is a high priority on remembering veterans right now and the memorials for those who were killed should be kept up."

— Glenn Pratt, Veterans Memorial Committee

The Veterans Memorial Committee plans to refurbish Peter Cogill Square at the corner of Church and Doane streets.

"I think there is a high priority on remembering veterans right now and the memorials for those who were killed should be kept up," Pratt said.

Some of the repairs are fairly simple, such as fixing the Herman E. Daley square sign at the corner of Jerusalem Road and North Main Street, or refinishing the William C. Laidlaw Square plaque. However, others require more effort.

The most involved project is improving the Peter Cogill Square, at the intersection of Doane Street and Church Street where the fire hydrant needs to be relocated. "The fire hydrant sticks out like a sore thumb," Pratt said. He said the committee will try to work with the Water Department on the relocation of the hydrant.

The curb also needs to be defined so cars won't cut across and ruin the grass. With the existing low curb, vehicles often cut the corner running up onto the square.

Another square that needs attention is the one dedicated to Norman M. Todd. The square at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Norman Todd Road. Todd died from the effects of radiation after WW II.

"The square used to be really something," Pratt said. "We are going to get it back to the way it used to be."

Pratt said it is important to preserve these, and other memorials, for the sake of history.

"I have a personal fear that younger generations don't know the sacrifices and hardships that were endured by these veterans," he said. "The people that were killed left a normal life and paid a pretty high price."

Pratt wanted to make sure their names are kept in the forefront of the community.

Other improvements include making a plaque and dedicating a square to Allen Buffum, erecting a plaque for Howard R. Gleason Road, like the ones built for Robert E. Jason and William B. Long Jr., and seeing what would be appropriate for a Perry J. Johnson plaque.

Pratt is optimistic that Town Meeting will approve the appropriation.

"I think it's fairly difficult to build a case against this cause," he said.

Next year, the committee will go to Town Meeting for an appropriation to build an honor roll at Veterans Park at the harbor dedicated to Cohasset soldiers who served in the Vietnam and Korean wars.

The honor roll at Veterans Park for local veterans of WW II has been up for several years. Plans are to eventually have all soldiers who served during wartime honored at the park. Pratt said the World War I honor roll will be completed soon.

"We are just waiting for the stone mason to finish," he said.

Determination to get things done

Sheralyn Craig of Kensington, Md., in her nomination. "Glenn takes pride in the community and cares about what happens to the town."

For Robert E. Maree, Jr., who lost his brother, Edward, in Vietnam, this past Veterans Day was a memorable one, thanks to Pratt.

"I attended the memorial dedication to the Cohasset Gold Star Mothers," Maree recalled. "This was a special event for me because of my brother who served two tours of duty in Vietnam and especially for my Mom… I will never forget that day."

A selection committee consisting of Jennifer Piepenbrink, 622 CJC Hwy., Osborne Ingram 274 Beechwood St., Town Manager Mark Haddad, and Cohasset Mariner editor Mary Ford selected Pratt for the ninth annual Citizen of the Year award from a field of seven nominations submitted by 27 different individuals and families.

Pratt, 54, graduated from Cohasset High in 1965 and joined the Massachusetts National Guard a few years later. During his stint in the guard, his best assignment was as a general's aide to Cohasset's Gen. Edward Logan, commander of the 26th Infantry Division.

His time in the guard coupled with the effects of the Vietnam War at home had a profound effect on Pratt, who, to this day, continues efforts to ensure the sacrifice so many local soldiers made won't be forgotten.

"Back in 1969, which was the biggest year of losses for Cohasset, I started to talk to people about doing something for our friends," Pratt recalled. "Until your peers start dying in the service, you don't get it. You don't understand what it is."

Cohasset lost a total of eight young men in Vietnam including Alan Keating, who had been a lifelong friend. "I knew Alan my whole life and our parents were friends," Pratt said.

So Pratt got a group together and asked Town Meeting for $6,600 to install the plaques honoring those who lost their lives in wartime since World War I at Veterans Memorial Park at the harbor.

A little more than 20 years later, Pratt led the effort to dedicate squares around town to local soldiers who died in Vietnam and Korea. And this spring the Veterans Memorial Committee plans to refurbish several veterans' squares that need attention and dedicate a square to WWI veteran Allen A. Buffum. The committee will also finish the honor roll at Veterans Memorial Park to include those who served in Korea and Vietnam.

Getting a group together is another hallmark of Pratt's style. Often the mover and the one who stays on board for years – Pratt is still very much a team player.

The father of three grown children (Megan, 23, Caroline, 21, and Chris, 20) got involved in their pre-school days with the Community Center where his children attended nursery school there.

"A bunch of us got involved back in '82," he recalled. That involvement led to two building expansions one in 1984 (gymnasium and nursery school) and another in 1991 (the Senior Center). Pratt served on the Community Center Board of Directors for 12 years, 10 as president.

Cemetery space

It was back in 1977 when Pratt was on the Planning Board that the cemetery issue first surfaced. The board was reviewing the Benjamin Report of the early '60s – a master plan – that spelled out the town would run out of cemetery space in 25 years. What followed for Pratt over the next 20 years was often frustrating efforts to find more burial space. There were about 20 people on and off the committee over the years.

"I stayed on and on," he said. The committee's efforts included finding a potential solution only to have it scrapped because of neighborhood opposition or other factors.

"Some (solutions) never surfaced because no one listened to the money situation," Pratt explained. But Pratt never gave up despite having to have a thick skin to handle those who liked to poke holes in a well-thought out plan.

"It's just the way I am," he said about seeing the job through to fruition.

But today, largely thanks to Pratt, Woodside Cemetery has been expanded and the Cemetery Committee is ready to offer graves for sale on a pre-need basis for the first time in a decade. During the interview at Suburban Companies, a building services business, which Pratt owns — he proudly displayed the new cemetery brochure that is being mailed to all Cohasset households.

There's nary a corner of Cohasset that Pratt hasn't touched in a positive way.

A lover of history [the Pratt family dates back in town to 1680], Pratt also led the effort to refurbish the old "Konohasset" hand-pump fire engine for the historical society a few years back. He also bought a retired, surplus engine from the town which he refurbished and shares with the Little League Parade every year.

Other good deeds include: a new scoreboard for the Dorr gym (which is now at the Osgood School due to the high school construction), arranging for new gym mats, helping with the renovation of the Lightkeeper's Residence – the list goes on. Last year Pratt was appointed to the Water Commission to fill an unexpired term and is up for election this spring.

"I've been interested in the Water Department since I was a kid," says Pratt, whose father Edwin Pratt served as superintendent of the Water Department for many years. "It was part of the dinner-table discussion."

But the centerpiece of Pratt's town-wide efforts so far is no doubt the Gold Star Mothers memorial in the expanded section of Woodside Cemetery. Upwards of 500 people – many of whom were family and friends of the fallen soldiers – attended the Veterans Day dedication.

It was during the ceremony where the hearts of old and young alike were touched in a warm, caring way.

"Glenn and I are former classmates and reaped the benefits of growing up in a wonderful town," said Robert Maree, whose mother Betty Maree is a Gold Star Mother. "Now he has given back to the town and touched the hearts and souls of so many of us.

"For that, I feel he is a worthy candidate for the Citizen of the Year Award."

A taste of Tuscany

Visiting chef shares her recipes at sold-out Mount Blue dinner

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

When renowned Italian chef Benedetta Vitali agreed to do an American tour promoting her first cookbook "Soffritto" it was no surprise she'd be making stops at some of the country's most renowned restaurants.

After making an appearance at the San Francisco food show, Vitali will step into the kitchen at Alice Water's restaurant Chez Panisse before flying off to Chicago where she'll cook up lunch at Charlie Trotter's. Sage will be her stop on the Boston Cook's tour before heading down to Westport, Conn. to hang with Martha Stewart.

Before returning to her native Florence, Vitali will squeeze in one last New England visit, wrapping up her whirlwind tour Jan. 30 at Mount Blue where she'll prepare a four-course Tuscan dinner to the 120 lucky guests who reserved a seat at the sold-out culinary event.

There's no question the Norwell Center restaurant is in good company on that list of who's who on the national restaurant scene but its place on Vitali's tour itinerary has a little something to do with the designer and photographer that helped put her exquisite cook book together — longtime residents Cary and Barbara Wolinsky.

Cary, who has worked for National Geographic for three decades, shot all of the photography in the book on location in Italy along with wife Barbara, a graphic designer who designed the layout — including selecting all the incredible images in the 240 page-book.

"Benedetta didn't want to do a normal cookbook," Barbara said. "She wanted people to understand the quality of food, how to use it and the people involved." Cary's portfolio of work, which was one of a handful shown to her by publicist Michael Milford, appealed to her at once, Barbara said.

In addition to the beautiful color photographs of prepared foods including breads and pasta dishes and gelato you can almost taste through the picture, Cary captured those behind the foods Vitali loves to prepare —from the fishermen bringing in their catch, and the street vendors selling fresh vegetables, to her own restaurant staff picking fresh herbs that will be used to season the dishes at her restaurant Zibibbo.

These are the central ingredients to her book and to Vitali's way of life. Which makes the book's title, "Soffritto" particularly appropriate, Barbara explains. In cooking, Soffritto is the term for the aromatic combination of sautéed carrots, celery and onions used as the first ingredients in much of traditional Tuscan cooking. How these three main ingredients are cooked determines the full flavor in the recipe's finished product.

When Cary and Barbara started out to put the concept into pictures, they were expecting to shoot about 60 images for the book — a daunting task considering the short five-week time frame they had to work with last fall.

"Cary's given double that amount of time to do a 22-page story in National Geographic," said Barbara, noting that they knew at the outset they'd have to be moving as fast as they could the entire time they were in Florence.

"We were up at 5 a.m. and out the door when our driver arrived. Our day usually ended at 7 p.m. after which we'd get cleaned up and go to eat — usually at Zibibbo's but occasionally we'd try other restaurants," she said.

"The food was fabulous," said Barbara who is not normally adventurous when it comes to trying new things. But Vitali's delicious traditional recipes had her biting into sweet breads and tripe before the trip was through. "With her cooking, it was so good," she said.

In addition to a challenging schedule of shooting, Barbara said Cary faced some climatic challenges along the way. In general, the weather in Florence at that time of year is beautiful.

"It's a gorgeous time of year with just the right temperatures," Barbara said. But the Tuscan landscape during morning and early evening hours takes on a misty, hazy quality which made shooting during those hours difficult.

Still, Cary managed to capture the region's people, their surroundings, and of course the food, incredibly well. So well, in fact that the 60 images they would need turned into 150 by the time the book went to press.

"The book grew as we went along," she said.

The finished product which retails for $32 (available at Front Street Book Shop, Borders, Barnes and Noble and at Amazon.com) is a combination art and cook book that is eminently readable.

Vitali and the Wolinskys will sign copies of the book from 6 to 7:30 p.m. — just prior to the dinner Jan. 30. The hors d'oeuvre and cocktail segment will feature traditional Tuscan appetizers including delicious Pecorino cheese served with grapes and nuts and "North River Gold" honey provided by Norwell bee-keepers Bruce and Debbie Lenahan.

"We tried to keep everything as local as we could," said Mount Blue owner Jayne Bowe, who along with chef Larry Weigel has been having a great time hunting up the all ingredients Vitali will need for the four-course feast.

"Larry's very excited," said Bowe. "He's been emailing back and forth to find out what he'll need for the dinner."

While their search has taken them to Cambridge and Boston where markets import Italian cheeses and vegetables like cardoons, looking locally for the honey for the Pecorino cheese appetizer is very much in keeping with Vitali's philosophy for cooking which involves using the freshest, local and home-grown ingredients — ingredients that are often quite literally plucked off the vine and put into a pan.

Guest chefs like Vitali give Weigel a chance to expand his cooking horizons, Bowe said and don't be surprised if something he cooks up next Wednesday night is adopted for future Mount Blue menus.

Mount Blue became a stop on the tour at the Wolinsky's request. Barbara has worked with the Bowes on other events and thought Mount Blue would be a great place for Vitali to work her culinary magic.

Bowe couldn't agree more.

"Our environment is fun and playful here and the food will be just perfect for it," Bowe said. While the $60 per plate dinner is sold-out, Bowe said people can still attend the $20 cocktail and hors d'oeuvre hour, sample delicious appetizers and Italian red and white wines and meet Vitali during the book signing.

Those with tickets for the dinner are in for an unbelievable culinary experience featuring four traditional courses with complimenting wines and dessert.

"It's a really nice thing to do in the middle of the doldrums of winter," said Bowe who will host 120 for the dinner.

While this was the first cookbook she and Cary have done, Barbara said it most likely won't be their last. Russia might be the Wolinsky's next stop.

"We're hoping to do another (book) with a restaurant in Russia, called the Pushkin which features traditional cooking," said Barbara, noting Cary has been to Russia to shoot several times over the years.

But this week the Wolinsky's will be staying close to home in anticipation of Vitali's dinner at Mount Blue and are looking forward to sharing the taste of Tuscany with their friends and neighbors.

"It's wonderful to be able to introduce people to Benedetta and her cooking and to have others enjoy the pleasures that we do."

January heat wave forecast for art center fund-raiser

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

It might be 30 degrees outside with a chance of light snow but don't be surprised to find folks sporting bathing suits and flip flops in Cohasset this weekend.

Creative summer-ware is the recommended attire for Saturday night's Beach Bash fundraiser for the South Shore Art Center. So take out your self-tanning lotion and slip into your sarong and head over to Atlantica, which bash organizers promise will be transformed into a summer paradise sure to melt away the winter blues.

Art center board member and Beach Bash designer Franny Andahazy said the popular restaurant will be split in half for the event with an authentic beach party atmosphere complete with beach umbrellas, lifeguards and a functioning lighthouse on one side, and a tropical oasis featuring a functional tiki bar and palm trees on the other.

"We wanted to bring some fun into the middle of winter," said Andahazy who has made a career of party planning. Andahazy's Boston-based business Party By Design has been catering to the event needs of some of the region's largest corporations for going on two decades. An artist in her own right, Andahazy did the design work for the art center's hugely successful wine tasting event last fall and when the beach bash notion was floated, she again came forward to contribute her creativity, along with a good deal of her time and the materials for this weekend's event.

"I like to give back to the arts," said Andahazy of Hull, who became an art center member after showing her paintings at the Festival on the Common. By helping to make this fundraiser one of the art center's most colorful and fun, Andahazy hopes more people will attend and contribute generously.

"People who are having fun tend to be more generous."

"We're hoping to raise about $30,000," said Monica McKenney, the art center's director of public relations. All the proceeds raised will support the center's educational outreach programs —"Looking at Art" and "Arts to Go."

Those in attendance will have several ways to contribute. The $100 per ticket event ($85 for art center members) will also feature both a live and a silent auction with merchandise and trips valued at $40,000. Items up for grabs include furniture, colorful beach umbrellas, beach chairs and canvas bags hand-painted by local artists. Vacations and dinner packages are also available to the highest bidder.

"We have quite a few interesting dinner and wine packages," said art center board member and Beach Bash Committee co-chairman Jennifer Willms. Anna Abruzzi will offer a cooking class at her home and the Red Lion Inn chef will do the same in your own home or serve you an your guests dinner, Willms said. The Hingham Wine Merchant is providing a wine tasting for the winning bidder and 23 of his or her closest friends.

Cohasset jeweler has added some glitter to the event with a white gold and diamond bracelet which will also be auctioned off Saturday night.

To keep people interested in the auction items and on the dance floor, Andahazy said the Beach Bash will feature beach-style concession stands and grazing stations rather than a sit-down dinner. A volley ball game with beach balls might be just the thing to get people dancing and lifeguards will be circulating with hors d'oeuvres and tropical drinks, Andahazy said. Local band "The Grateful Dads" will provide the musical entertainment for the event.

"It's going to be a lot of fun," said Willms. "We want people to go away saying the art center has great events."

Planning for the big fund-raiser began at the end of August, recalled Willms. After Sept. 11 happened she said the committee became even more determined to do something "light, fun and positive" to give people a great break.. While quite a few ideas were tossed around, in the end the consensus was "What could be better than a summer party in January?"

Obviously art center supporters agree. Ticket sales were going very well with just over a week to go, Willms said.

Quick and Easy Steak au Poivre

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The basis of this dish is simple enough – a pan-seared steak impregnated with peppercorns and finished in a brandy/cream sauce. At its best, it marries the rough and tumble taste of steak and pepper with a creamy, four star pan sauce. It's the prince and pauper of French cooking. Yet, badly executed, Steak au Poivre has a pale crust, an insipid sauce, and is so loaded with peppercorns that one is forced to wash it down with tumblers of high-octane wine.

The first step is choosing a steak. Steak au Poivre is typically made with strip steak but I also tried ribeye, shell steak and sirloin tip, the latter two in hopes of keeping down the price. (I didn't try tenderloin since it has less flavor and is wildly expensive.) The shell steak was dry and tough, the sirloin tip was juicy but tough, and the ribeye was the winner – more flavorful and slightly juicier than the strip. However, it ain't cheap, running $6.99 to 10.99 per pound. The steaks are best when cut to a one-inch thickness. It allows for a well-browned crust without overcooking the interior. (Thinner steaks quickly dry out.)

The problem with the pepper is that, when pressed into the steak, it provides a barrier between meat and pan thus preventing browning and the development of a nice fond, those browned bits which are used to make a rich sauce. After much testing, I decided to simply add the peppercorns to the sauce instead, a method that worked just fine. The heat of the pan was also an issue. When I tried high heat, the fond became too dark and bitter by the time the steak was cooked; medium/high heat, therefore, worked best. I also found it necessary to weigh down the steak to produce the best crust. A second skillet placed on top of the steak worked fine.

The sauce is usually made from shallots, brandy, cream, stock, butter, and lemon juice or vinegar. In my case, I was adding the pepper directly to the sauce and I preferred black to green peppercorns and liked them crushed instead of whole or ground. I found stock unnecessary since it watered down the sauce, requiring extra time to reduce it back to the proper thickness. Without the stock, the sauce cooked very quickly and the tastes were fresher. One third cup brandy or Cognac and 2/3 cups heavy cream was just right. I dumped the butter as being superfluous. Cognac is a bit sweeter than brandy but the choice is yours.

The shallots didn't add much given the horsepower of the peppercorns and the lemon juice/vinegar was unnecessary since the sauce now cooked so quickly that it was bright and lively on its own. As for technique, I simply dumped all of the sauce ingredients into the pan at the same time and scraped the bottom of the pan to dissolve the fond. In just 2 minutes, the sauce was done. Now this simple sauce was made with only three ingredients and I liked it better than more complex and more traditional recipes.

STEAK AU POIVRE MADE EASY

Place the peppercorns in a heavy-duty zipper lock bag and whack them with either a rolling pin, a heavy saucepan, or flat meat pounder. Note that the cooking times are approximate. Everything depends on the thickness of the steaks, the type of skillet, and the horsepower of your stovetop.

For the steaks

4 ribeye or strip steaks about 1 inch thick (8-10 ounces each)

Salt and freshly ground pepper

For the sauce

1/3 cup brandy or Cognac

2/3 cup heavy cream

1 tablespoon black peppercorns, crushed

1. Heat a 12-inch heavy-duty skillet over medium heat for 4 minutes. Season the steaks with salt and freshly ground pepper. Place the steaks in the hot skillet, adjust the heat to medium-high and place another skillet over them. (If you do not have another skillet you may press down on the steaks with the bottom of a cake pan.) Cook the steaks without moving them for 6 minutes, or until well browned. Flip the steaks and press on them again with either another skillet or cake pan. Cook them for about 4 minutes longer for rare, 5 minutes for medium-rare and 6 minutes for medium. Transfer to a large plate and tent loosely with foil.

2. Add the brandy, heavy cream and peppercorns to the skillet. Bring to a boil, scraping the bottom of the pan with a wooden spoon or spatula to loosen browned bits. Simmer until thick enough to heavily coat the back of a metal spoon, about 2 minutes. Adjust seasonings with salt if necessary.

3. Place steaks on individual dinner plates. Spoon sauce over steaks and serve immediately.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 23

Avoid rigid time schedules this morning. The Taurus moon aligns with unpredictable Uranus at 7:29 a.m. and becomes inactive. If you are working, handle routine chores and follow through on unfinished projects. Influences turn around completely at 7:28 p.m., when the moon enters lively Gemini. This is a great evening to get in touch with friends you haven't heard from in a while or to chat on the internet or just hang out with favorite buddies.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 24

This is a day that can go either way. The moon continues to travel in Gemini today and tomorrow. Because, Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini travels in retrograde, there may be breakdowns, changes in plans, unexpected dilemmas. Be adaptable; go with the flow. It is better to handle a variety of tasks rather than one project that demands mental precision and concentration. A sense of humor is your ace in the hole.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 25

The planet Venus, traveling in Aquarius, interacts with Saturn and Neptune today, Mercury tomorrow. The moon travels in Gemini, making for a social day. People will be friendly, talkative. Influences are prime for patching up relationships that have broken down. Although this is not a favorable time for beginning new friendships, it is ideal for strengthening the ties in existing partnerships. At 2:22 p.m. the Gemini moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 26

The combination of a full moon buildup and Mercury traveling in retrograde promises a hectic weekend. Be more cautious. Channel high energy productively. This is a great day to tackle 'rainy day' projects, particularly in your home. Clean out drawers and closets; make repairs. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 1:17 a.m. and forms a challenging 90-degree contact to combative Mars at 10:55 a.m. At 2:03 p.m. the moon aligns with Jupiter and becomes inactive. Mercury retrograde is also in high profile, aligning with Venus and Neptune today, Saturn and the sun tomorrow, and Mars on Monday.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 27

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today. The moon continues inactive travel in the sign Cancer. Others may be moody and difficult to get along with. Keep a low profile. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Meditate for clarity and peace of mind. An alignment of the sun and Mercury may shed new light on issues that have been troubling you. Because it's often difficult to sleep on full moon evenings, plan to work or study or party into the wee hours.

MONDAY, JANUARY 28

Along with the full moon, a flurry of astrological activity greets us today. Slow down. Remain calm no matter what is happening around you. The sun aligns with Saturn and Neptune; retrograde Mercury with Mars. A 90-degree alignment of Mars to Jupiter intensifies this high energy period. Don't overdo, overextend or take risks. The moon enters Leo at 3:31 a.m. and the full moon culminates at 5:50 p.m., when the moon and sun oppose at 9-degrees of Leo/Aquarius.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 29

A harmonious alignment of Mars and Saturn saves this day. It means that you can focus on work projects and get them out of the way. Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished. There is a rough spot at 6:04 p.m., when the Leo moon opposes unpredictable Uranus and becomes inactive. Go with the flow. Catch up on rest and relaxation this evening.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30

The moon enters Virgo at 3:40 a.m., remaining there today and tomorrow. This Mercury-ruled moon may intensify the retrograde action of Mercury, generating unexpected obstacles, reversals, mechanical or electrical breakdowns. Making important decisions or signing contracts are definitely off limits. On the other hand, this period is prime for developing study or research projects or for making repairs or renovations. Mars and Neptune align at 12:00 p.m. A lunar contact to Saturn at 4:33 p.m. may bring a lull period, when energy is deflated. Plan a quiet evening.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31

A 90-degree alignment of the moon and Pluto at 6:46 a.m. may spark emotional thunderstorms. Avoid getting caught up in morning hassles or the blues. At this time the moon becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. No major planetary activity occurs. Take advantage of this period and get work projects, especially jobs you have been putting off, out of the way. You can be most productive. Clean out drawers and closets, get rid of items that are cluttering up your life. Zero in on diets and self-improvement programs. Take better care of yourself.

The last time the art center hosted its big fundraiser, more than 200 attended the black-tie event, and McKenney is hoping for a similar turnout this weekend.

"It's such a welcome theme at this time of the year," McKenney said.

And it benefits wonderful art education programs, she added. For more than a decade, the art center has offered its outreach programs to local schools at a very small cost, McKenney said. Through "Looking at Art" students visit the art center exhibits, often get to meet the artists and then have an opportunity to do a hands-on project of their own. "Arts to Go" brings the artist to the schools to conduct a visiting arts program.

"It's a great program," said McKenney, noting that Saturday's fundraiser along with grant money makes both programs possible.

Witness the wonders of the winter garden

Green thumbs up

Part 1

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

In the aftermath of our most recent winter storm, brilliant sunshine drenched the dormant landscape illuminating a diamond-dusted blanket of new fallen snow beneath a canopy of crystal clear, deep blue skies. With camera in hand, I ventured forth into the garden to capture the beauty of nature's handiwork, pausing to savor the serenity and pristine elegance of this winter wonderland. Even an average landscape seems to be miraculously transformed into a picture postcard when overlaid with this uniform, crystalline coating. Mesmerized by the peaceful solitude of an absolutely perfect winter day, I wandered from garden to garden, enjoying the sights and sounds many gardeners fail to explore once the gardens have been put to bed at the end of the growing season.

A pair of white-breasted nuthatches, the little upside-down birds, systematically worked their way up and down the trunk of an old cherry tree as a distinctively-marked flicker landed nearby, its piercing call momentarily disrupting the tranquility. Tufted titmice, chick-a-dees and finches darted back and forth from feeders to the nearby shrubbery to feast on sunflower seeds. Perched among the branches of a rich, deep green Scotch pine, the unmistakable red plumage of a handsome male cardinal was particularly striking against the backdrop of the new fallen snow. Perhaps my favorite of all the little feathered creatures, the perky Carolina wren hopped along the fence railing, probing each nook and cranny for tidbits while singing its exuberant melody for all to enjoy.

Our dormant landscapes possess a beauty all their own with form, line and texture becoming the essential features. The pure white, snowy background serves to accentuate and highlight many of these elements which form the basis for any successful garden design, the so-called "bones" of the landscape. This is the season to analyze these primary elements that form the foundation and structure of your garden and to note adjustments that should be made when warmer weather permits modification of these fundamental forms and lines. Trees and shrubs, both deciduous and evergreen, are often the primary sources of structure and architecture in the garden but fences, arches, stone walls, arbors, gazebos, or even a birdhouse or feeder on a decorative post can be used to create strong vertical or horizontal lines.

There are many noteworthy deciduous trees and shrubs to provide structure and multi-seasonal beauty to the landscape. Some of these forms appear as living sculptures when viewed as part of the winter landscape, particularly against the backdrop of a snow cover or a clear blue sky. Look for the beauty in the silhouettes of trees whose leaves have fallen. Each family of trees tends to have its own unique architecture. Dogwoods, magnolias, Japanese maples and crabapples possess extremely attractive shapes when undressed. As the rays of sunlight strike their frameworks at a lower angle during the winter months, longer shadows and intricate patterns are cast providing additional interest. This slanted lighting also presents an ideal opportunity for backlighting dramatic elements that you may want to consider when positioning a tree of architectural interest in your landscape. Placing an attractive element to the south, southeast or southwest of your home will allow it to be backlit for many hours.

Weeping forms are personal favorites and pendulous varieties of cherry, katsura, willow, birch, threadleaf Japanese maple and crabapple are just a few of the species which I have planted to provide this graceful form in my own landscape. The contorted, twisted branches of Harry Lauder's Walking Stick, corkscrew willow and the Japanese fantail willow offer equally unique designs.

Consider also the texture of bark and the variations in its color. Birches, with their distinctive, peeling bark, are especially attractive when planted against a backdrop of evergreens. A clump of Heritage Birch serves as a focal point in one of my shady borders that can be readily viewed from several windows and sitting areas, its soft beige, peeling bark dramatic in all seasons. The handsome, silver and cream mottled bark of a stewartia is exceptionally lovely. A small specimen graces my front walk, where its upright form, creamy white flowers in July, and attractive foliage during the growing season offer year-round beauty. The cinnamon-colored, peeling bark of an oak-leaf hydrangea adds a unique look to a foundation planting in winter, furnishing showy, white, pyramidal blooms in summer and handsome, bronze foliage in the fall. A paperbark maple graces a shady corner of my property, its sensational peeling bark a highlight in all seasons, with an additional bonus of brilliant red, fall foliage. Nearby, the silvery, peeling trunk of the Seven-Son Flower (Heptacodium) stands in contrast, its clusters of fall flowers small but noticeably fragrant at a time when few other shrubs are in bloom.

As you analyze your landscape at this time of year, it should be noted that the scenery in winter is usually viewed from within your home or near entryways. Focus your most dramatic and colorful plantings where they can be observed from a kitchen window, a favorite sitting area, beside a walkway or along the driveway or street. A well-planned design that provides color and textural contrasts during the winter months becomes a landscape for all seasons.

Field of police chief candidates narrowed to four

Finalists will make the rounds in town

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

After much anticipation, the results are finally in. The four finalists for the position of Cohasset Police Chief have been announced.

Cohasset Sgt. Robert Jackson is the only local candidate of the four with the others serving on the police departments in New Bedford, Fitchburg and Westfield.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is thrilled with all the candidates and in the coming weeks they will be interviewed by various department heads, school officials and union representatives. Haddad said he expects to announce the new chief by the end of February.

"I am very pleased with the quality of the candidates," he said. "The search committee did a fantastic job."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who was on the police search committee, said the town was very fortunate to have so many qualified individual apply for the position. She said it was difficult to narrow down the field of 54 to four.

The only candidate to live within the town's limits, Sgt. Jackson stated in his letter to Haddad that his background provides him with the supervisory, community relations, and budget management skills the town is seeking. Jackson has 22 years of police experience with the Cohasset Police Department including 18 years of supervisory experience as a sergeant.

He also has 30 years of service in the United States Naval Reserve including extensive command experience that he believes demonstrates strong leadership and strategic planning skills. Jackson was also elected to the Cohasset Water Commission in 1980 and served for three years.

Jackson graduated with a bachelor of arts in political science in 1970 from the University of Virginia and went on to receive his bachelor of science in law enforcement in 1979

Small houses double in size

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The adage "good things come in small packages" doesn't seem to apply to houses anymore. When buyers shop for a home today, size doesn't necessarily enter into the equation. If it's too small, the new owners just add on.

David Drinkwater, who is president of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors, said there aren't enough choice locations in a town like Cohasset to build on, so many buyers are opting for small houses on a great site with the intent of completely renovating and expanding their homes.

"The trend is certainly going to continue because of the value of the piece of land the house is sitting on, is a larger percentage of the whole property," said Drinkwater, who is also a partner at Coastal Countryside Properties in Cohasset.

This Atlantic Avenue fence doesn't fit the mold

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An Atlantic Avenue homeowner wants to delineate her property by installing a fence.

Sounds simple enough.

But think again, the planned fence isn't in your ordinary neighborhood but on Cohasset's so-called "Gold Coast" where dozens of million-dollar homes are perched high on ledge overlooking a sometimes volatile ocean.

But then again — even for Atlantic Avenue — this isn't a "usual" mansion. The house is a box-like structure, which is on the National Register of Historic Places because of its world-renowned architect, the late Walter Gropius, who pioneered the "modern" look.

So it should come as no surprise that the proposal isn't a typical stockade, split rail or picket fence.

To get the picture you have to imagine a chain link fence, but with fabric substituted for the chain link.

"We can have it break at any strength you want."

— Richard Henderson, attorney for the applicant

The fence would consist of a rugged, charcoal-colored, tweed fabric (akin to what you might find on lawn chairs) attached top and bottom to horizontal steel pipes and anchored on the sides to vertical steel posts, similar to what you might see on the deck of a cruise ship. The fence would also be "weatherproof" by breaking away in stormy conditions to allow water or wind to pass through.

Varying strengths of twine woven through eyelets — with the thinner or weaker twine giving way with a certain amount of force — would anchor the fence fabric to the steel posts. The thicker twine to be used on one end of each section of fence would keep the fabric attached to the steel pole so the material wouldn't fly completely off the posts creating a possible hazard.

The Zoning Board of Appeals has to determine if the fence can be installed in a floodplain before it can issue a special permit.

An entourage of engineers, marine experts and an attorney with fence plans interested the board with details about how the fence would

Harbor Walk plans may be on the ropes

Town to hire its own consultant

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The proposed harbor walk improvements plans took a hit Tuesday as both selectmen and some residents voiced their disappointment with the ideas.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris was particularly upset and asserted that the community does not want any improvements to the harbor area.

"Whose project is this anyway?" she asked. "Why are we even doing anything to the harbor?"

Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to write a letter to the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, the corporation which is working on the harbor walk plans, thanking the CRC for its work but asking it not to hold anymore public workshops on the harbor.

They also agreed to take money from the Public Works Economic Development grant to hire a different firm to make changes to the plans drawn up by the Cecil Group, which was hired by CRC. The PWED grant is a $1.5 million grant that was awarded to the town by the state for streetscape and other improvements.

"There is nothing wrong with the harbor," McMorris said. "I'm upset, and residents are upset, because we feel our changes haven't been considered."

McMorris added the town should hire a consultant that addresses what the town wants, and more importantly, can afford.

"It's to tweak what's already there," she said.

Sam Knox, a Border Street resident, said if the purpose of the CRC workshops was to solicit community input for its plans, it failed. A harbor walk improvement workshop was conducted by the CRC at St. Anthony's Church Parish Center two weeks ago.

"The suggestions, objections and concerns of the neighbors failed to be incorporated into the CRC plans," Knox wrote in a letter to selectmen.

"Why are we even doing anything to the harbor?"

— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

In a telephone interview Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, said he welcomes the community's input.

"We welcome the ideas and thoughts of the town," Rizzo said. "If some changes have not been incorporated, residents should call us or come by our office to discuss them."

Rizzo said it was discouraging to hear negative comments about the ideas especially when there has been little constructive criticism offered.

Another part of the plan Knox, and other residents, took exception to is that the harbor is dangerous.

"The CRC puts forth the idea that the harbor is unsafe so there is a need for improvements, but there is

SBAB update

Town Manager Mark Haddad informed selectmen about the Board of Education meeting he attended last week. A group of representatives from Hull, Norwell, Pembroke and Cohasset went before the board to discuss the decision to reduce the amount of funds appropriated in the School Building Assistance program. The group was only allowed six minutes to speak and left feeling disgruntled.

"They can choose to disagree with us if they want," Haddad said. "But they were downright rude to us." Haddad assured the selectmen that he will continue fighting for more funding and will work with Town Managers Phil Lemnios (Hull) and Jim Bordreau (Norwell) to get this issue resolved.

Selectman Tom Callahan wrote a letter to Governor Swift asking her to reconsider the proposed cuts. It was the board's hope that the letter can be distributed to all the communities involved in the program so they can be made aware of the potentially disastrous effects of a cut.

"We really need to wake everyone up about this," Callahan said.

The delay in reimbursement will make a significant dent in the pocketbooks of taxpayers, who will have to make payments on the entire school building mortgage until the state kicks in its share.

For example, in Cohasset that could mean an additional $800-plus a year for the owner of a home valued at $500,000.

Village workshop

On Thursday, Feb. 7 at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall Auditorium the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation and the Town's Village Revitalization Task Force will hold a workshop on streetscape design alternatives for Cohasset Village. Discussion items will include types of sidewalk and crosswalk materials, granite curbing, ornamental light fixtures, and tree and flower planting opportunities. Physical examples of brick, blue stone and concrete sidewalk designs will be on display, as well as samples of ornamental light fixtures. In addition, representatives of the Cecil Group will give a pictorial presentation of design alternatives implemented by communities throughout the region. For additional information please call the CRC at (781) 383-2449.

Open Space board seeks two members

The Open Space Committee is looking for two new members. The committee's role is to recommend properties for acquisition by the town, and to oversee implementation of goals set forth in the Open Space Plan. For more information, contact Debbie Cook at 383-6313.

The Open Space Committee has completed its five-year, state-mandated open space report. Copies are available for viewing at the town hall, or Conservation Commission office.

Forest Avenue sidewalk update

Town Manager Mark Haddad asked selectmen to put a "just in case article" on the Annual Town Meeting warrant for more money for Forest Avenue sidewalk construction. The town has already appropriated $190,000 for the project, but Haddad doesn't think that will be enough. He said the project could cost $50,000 to $100,000 higher than anticipated.

Selectmen balked at the request saying its time the town became more fiscally prudent.

"They should stretch the $190,000 as far is it can go," said Selectman Merle Brown. "I don't want to spend anymore money on this."

Selectman Tom Callahan agreed saying it was about time the town prioritized how it is going to spend its money.

"We already allocated $190,000," he said. "That was the estimate we were given and the bids should not be more than that."

Haddad said the estimate was done six months ago and unforeseen costs may have ballooned the price.

The "just in case" article will not appear on the warrant.

Manager change

On Tuesday, selectmen approved the change of manger at DiNero's restaurant from, Sandra M. Stilphen to John J. Martin.

Position filled

Selectmen appointed Peter Wood, 77 Summer St., was placed on the Cohasset Common Historic District Tuesday.

Red Cross month

The Town of Cohasset is officially recognizing March as Red Cross month. The Red Cross sent a letter to all the municipalities in the state requesting this designation.

Small houses to double in size

As an indication of that trend, two homeowners — who plan to double the size of their homes — came before the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals last week seeking zoning relief before moving ahead with their additions. Neighbors who attended the hearings gave the plans mixed reviews.

"This is going to loom large."
— Woody Chittick, Zoning Board

The new owners of 491 Jerusalem Road plan to double the size of the existing house.

The waterfront house at 491 Jerusalem Road near Linden Drive is a small, Cape Cod-style home built in 1956 on about one-half acre The new owners Margaret Fitzpatrick and William Shelton plan to enlarge the first floor of the house by 426 square feet to 1,668 square feet, by expanding the living space using the present terrace and part of the existing garage. They also plan to add a second floor increasing the total living space of the home to 3,200 square feet which about doubles its current size — not including the new garage to be built in front of the house.

Zoning board chairman Woody Chittick said although total lot coverage was within the zoning regulations, the new garage would occupy "one heck of a lot of the upland" that, coupled with dramatic changes to the house, would attract attention.

"This is going to loom large," he said about the way the home will appear from the street and to abutters.

But Cohasset architect Heidi Condon, who represents the owners, said the expansion would make the house, which she said is "inappropriately small" for the neighborhood, a better fit.

"It looms small now," she said. Jerusalem Road is known for its ocean vistas and for the most part, spectacular, grand homes.

Although the project received high marks from Mary Eisenhaure of 478 Jerusalem Road who stated in a letter to the board, the home expansion would be "a definite enhancement," Ellen Morrissey of 488 Jerusalem Road described it as "an aggressive plan" for a non-conforming structure. (The owners need a special permit to add a second floor over the existing garage because the garage doesn't meet setback requirements under the zoning bylaw and therefore, the expansion would increase the non-conformity. The house was built nearly 50 years ago, just before the zoning by-law went into effect.)

New homeowners in a neighborhood just a short jog across town near the harbor also plan to dramatically increase the size of their 100-year-old house on Stockbridge Street, where homes sit on small lots.

Peter and Gillian O'Connell plan to double the size of their 1,075-square-foot home that sits on a 9,100-square-foot lot. The increase in breadth of the house, which is sandwiched between Stockbridge Street and Ennice Avenue, was of concern to neighbors.

Condon, who was also representing the O'Connells, said the increase in size would not change the fabric of the neighborhood. The plans that include building a one-car garage require a special permit because the structure is closer to the street (Ennice Avenue) than regulations allow. Condon said the owners could by right build a two-car garage on the Stockbridge side of the house where there is plenty of setback from the road, but felt a one-car garage off Ennice Avenue would be a compromise.

Richard Redfield, 6 Ennice Avenue, worried the neighborhood would lose its "openness" if homeowners were permitted to turn small houses into big ones. And Will Fox, 35 Stockbridge St. said his view of the harbor from his front porch might be obstructed by the addition.

During the O'Connell hearing, Chittick, the zoning board chairman, surmised if a house is too small than perhaps perspective buyers should look at buying another house.

Later in the hearing zoning board member Anson Whealler said he was concerned about "mansion-ization" in town but noted the bylaw permits huge additions as long as they are within setback and height requirements and don't cover too much of the lot.

In a telephone interview, Drinkwater said both homes are great examples of choice locations where the new owners are doing the next best thing to a tear down.

The 491 Jerusalem Road house (which sold for $1.25 million last June) has views of Boston and Minot Light. And the house at 31 Stockbridge St. (which sold for $422,000 earlier this month) is near the harbor and in walking distance of the village. Both homes are on the sewer.

Drinkwater said another example of the trend is the house at 419 Jerusalem Road – an unassuming 1960 Royal Barry Wills Cape on three-quarters of an acre – that sold for $1.75 million and will be a "redo."

He said with Cohasset home prices, expanding a small house "to make it yours" is very likely a good investment. A home on Border Street recently broke the $3 million barrier, Drinkwater said.

Pilgrim Bank seeks sign variance

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's no secret that Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, based in the village, is building a new facility on Route 3A next to Tedeschi Plaza.

Although the bank will be visible, directional signs that would be limited to one square foot – might not be. The signs would direct the traffic flow through the parking lot and drive-through services.

David Hassan of Hassan Sign presented arguments to the Zoning Board of Appeals last week as to why the board should grant a variance allowing for directional signs that would be about three square feet in size.

The new bank building, which is on the corner of Brewster Road and 3A, is also seeking a variance to install two wall signs with the bank's name and logo that would go over the building's two entrances. The bylaws allow only one sign of up to 25-square-feet in size. Hassan is proposing two signs at 12-square-feet each.

He pointed out that both Rockland Trust and Fleet bank, also on Route 3A, have two signs.

The bylaw only allows directional signs to be one-square foot, which is too small, Hassan said. He explained the standard handicapped parking sign, for example, is 18 inches by 24 inches.

"I'm in the business and I think the sign code needs work," he said. Hassan also said anything smaller would be a potential hazard because people might not see the sign. The bank would like to install six posts with double-sided signs saying one-way, drive-through and the like.

Even though the zoning board might think the request makes sense – it still must meet several tests before a variance can be granted.

"Regardless of what we think or you assert, we have to figure out if these conditions fit with what you've requested," said zoning board member Anson Whealler.

A synopsis of the conditions that must be met for a variance include:

- The conditions and circumstances are unique to the applicant's lot;
- Strict application of the bylaw would deprive the applicant of reasonable use of the lot or building in the same manner permitted others in the neighborhood;
- The unique conditions are not the result of actions of the applicant;
- Relief, if approved, would not be detrimental to the public good;
- Relief, if approved, would not constitute a grant of special privilege.

The consensus of the board was that public safety would be enhanced with better signage.

Route 3A is a state highway. The state reduced the curb cuts at the site (where the old Curtis Liquors building stood) and the bank responded to that action by needing appropriate signs, the board argued. One of the accesses to the bank will be through the Tedeschi Plaza parking lot; the other would be off Brewster Road. There would be no direct access off Route 3A.

Hassan said without good traffic flow, it could be argued, the bank would be deprived of business.

Zoning board chairman Woody Chittick said the bank wanted to be able to use the property with a drive-through, as other banks in the are have.

The board closed the hearing and took the issue under advisement.

from Northeastern University. Jackson graduated from Brockton Police Academy in 1980 and completed a command training program from Babson College in 2001.

"I believe my unique blend of education, combined with my law enforcement, military and civic experience demonstrate my potential to meet the demands and challenges of the chief of police position," Jackson said in his letter to Haddad.

Another finalist competing for the position in Lt. Richard Spirlet from Westport. Spirlet has worked for the New Bedford Police Department for the past 30 years and is currently assigned to the Public Relations Unit.

"As a seasoned police officer, I found one common denominator in how to help neighborhoods move along the continuum of crime prevention and control: successfully reaching out to the community by maintaining a positive report between police officers and residents," Spirlet states in his letter to Haddad.

Spirlet served as a part-time patrolman on the Marion Police Department from 1968-1971 before becoming a patrolman on the K-9 Officer and Unit Supervisor division in New Bedford. He was promoted to sergeant in 1989 and promoted to lieutenant of the Neighborhood Police Unit in 1993. Also in 1993, Spirlet was part of a team that initiated Community Policing in New Bedford. As commanding officer, he was responsible for the implementation, fiscal administration, evaluation and monitoring of the unit which later went on to become a model in a nation-wide community policing program.

The following year, he oversaw human resource management protocol for 20 officers and three sergeants, as lieutenant of the Uniform Division of the North End Station Commander.

Spirlet received his associate of science in criminal justice from Bristol Community College in 1976 before attaining a bachelor of science in criminal justice from Salva Regina College in 1978. He accomplished a masters of science in criminal education from Anna Maria College in 1982.

"I would anticipate my administrative experience and overall qualifications in the field of law enforcement as an asset to the town and directly applicable to the requirements of the position of police chief," Spirlet stated.

"The search committee did a fantastic job."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

In a telephone interview he said, "there's no doubt Cohasset is a beautiful town and I would welcome an opportunity to police there."

The third finalist has been the police captain for the Fitchburg Police Department since 1989. Over the last decade, Captain Mark Louney has acted as the liaison for the police department in civil matters involving the police department and legal counsel representing the city or its insurance carriers.

Louney has served for more than ten years on the Montachusett Regional Vocational Technical School Committee during which time he was a member of the negotiation sub-committee and the budget sub-committee. Louney also has extensive investigative experience supervising the Bureau of Criminal Investigation for the City of Fitchburg.

He graduated from Mt. Wachusett Community College with an associate of science in law enforcement in 1974 and then received his bachelor of science in education from Fitchburg State College in 1979. He received a master of arts in criminal justice from Anna Maria College in 1983 and graduated from the Federal Bureau of Investigation Academy in 1991.

Louney lists as one of his accomplishments the development of programs and initiatives which have provided more than $4 million in grant funding and related support for the City of Fitchburg and its Police Department.

"It's very exciting to be picked from a group of 54," Louney said in a telephone interview. "I'm thrilled."

The final of the four candidates is Lieutenant Hipolito Nunez from the Westfield Police Department. In a telephone interview, Nunez said he would bring professionalism and strong leadership to the police department in Cohasset.

"I don't believe I know all the answers but with the community's involvement, we can find them," he said.

His current duties as lieutenant include supervising up to 22 officers on any given night as well as assigning patrol personal to their duties and reviewing all reports written by the officers under his command.

Nunez said he looking to build a police department which is community oriented and one where the citizens can have input and be an intricate part of the force. He said he sees the position in Cohasset as a place where he can grow intellectually while at the same time brining a professionalism and integrity to the position.

Nunez received his associate in science in law enforcement in 1987 from Holyoke Community College and went on to receive his bachelor of science in criminal justice in 1993 from Westfield State College. He rounded out his education in 2001 when he received a master of science in criminal justice administration from Western New England College.

The new chief will replace Chief Brian Noonan who is retiring.

Harbor Walk plans may be on the ropes

no evidence that supports this," he said.

Dick deLima, a Summer Street resident, said there have never been any studies done to show the dangers of the harbor area.

Rizzo said there is no need for studies.

"I don't believe you need to prove through data the dangers of an area especially when you see people walking on the street because there is no room on the sidewalk," he said. "That shows evidence of a safety problem."

The proposed walk would work its way down Margin Street, around Kimball's, and up Border Street to Government Island – a concept some objected to, saying the walk should hug the harbor.

Rizzo said there are many issues than inhibit the walk following the harbor. He said the permitting required to put a walk in a marsh area as well as extending it over the water, is extremely difficult to procure.

"We're trying to be realistic in our approach," he said.

The CRC is the corporation that has championed the village improvements. The CRC has also held a series of workshops designed to inform the town about the proposed changes to the village. The St. Stephen's sidewalk, which is being paid for through a state grant, would be the first part of the village revitalization project to see construction.

"break away" under a strong wind gust or if hit by a wave, conditions precluding it from adding to any potential flooding problem in inclement weather.

Richard Fitzgerald, an engineer hired by the homeowner, explained the physics of the fence and how a certain intensity of force — such as a 70 mph wind — on a particular amount of square footage would put enough load on the fabric causing the twine holding it in place to break. The lengths of the fence sections, which are proposed as eight-by-six feet, and the number and distance between the eyelets through which the twine would be woven, also contribute to the "breakability" of the fence.

The zoning board was concerned that the fence not redirect any water flow, so it spent some time trying to grasp what the engineers laid out before them.

"We can have it break at any strength you want," said attorney Richard Henderson, who represented the homeowner. He explained the proposal satisfies the board's concerns in that the fence would not create any debris in a storm and would not divert water flow. More traditional fences were ruled out for the site because in a storm, they could break apart creating a potential danger.

In order to be allowed to build in a watershed protection district, the structure must not divert water that would not have already been diverted if the structure weren't there, Henderson explained.

Sounds simple enough — except for the neighbors who don't want the fence fabric flapping over the property line onto their yard.

To that end attorney Charles Humphreys, representing the next-door neighbor, Doug McNeary at 355 Atlantic Ave., took issue with the concept of "designing a fence to fail" onto another person's land.

"If it breaks that way, an eight-foot section of fabric will be blowing over Mr. McNeary's property," he said. He suggested the fence be placed eight feet inside the property line. "Then that objection would go away," Humphreys said.

Fitzgerald, the engineer, replied the fence could have four-foot sections instead of eight-foot ones, and could be designed so the fabric breaks away at the top, rather than the sides of the panel, so when it breaks away it would just lie down flat and not flap like a flag.

There was also some dispute about whether the fence would be harmonious in the setting.

Humphreys described the fence as an "abomination," but zoning board member Barbara Power said it fit the modern look of the Gropius house.

But next-door neighbor McNeary said the fence could be seen from both sides, and from his perspective it didn't fit.

"What appears appropriate for that house might not be for my house," he said.

The zoning board asked for a table showing the effect wind and water velocity would have on the proposed fence. The board also closed the hearing and took the matter under advisement.

The Gropius House at 357 Atlantic Ave., which is now owned by Janice Reiter; was previously owned by Dr. Richard Anderson for many years. The McNeary home next door was owned by Mary Hagerty. Anderson and Hagerty did not have a problem with the fact part of the lawn of the Gropius house does look like it belongs next door, said Building Inspector Robert Egan, who said most fences go up without any zoning relief. The fact all or part of the proposed 54-foot-long fence is in the floodplain brought it before the zoning board.

BUSINESS

Red Lion chef is pleased to serve

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Robert Fathman became the executive chef at the Red Lion Inn on Aug. 1 and has been enjoying the work ever since.

"It's a great group of people that work here," he said. "I'm very happy at this restaurant."

Fathman, 39, said when he approaches a plate of food he tries to respect the origins of the cuisine. He said he tries to bring out the flavor of a dish without disguising it too much. His favorite plate on the Red Lion Inn's dinner menu is the seared rare tuna wrapped in prosciutto, caramelized figs, and citrus-vanilla syrup that sells for $22.

"I need to be excited about what I'm doing. Work is my life."

Red Lion Inn chef Robert Fathman, at right, with line cooks Tiago and Rodrigo Costa. Fathman is going to teach a community center course on how to prepare a special Valentine's dinner.

Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide, said he heard of Fathman when he was cooking at Grill 23 and later, The Federalist, both in Boston.

"He did great jobs with both of those restaurants and I wanted to bring someone in who would upscale the Red Lion Inn," Ordelheide said.

Despite Fathman's involvement in a rock group, Ordelheide said he likes the fact that Fathman doesn't think he is a star.

"A lot of these younger chefs think they're rock stars," said Ordelheide, who is happy to have him on board.

Fathman is in charge of every kitchen in the Red Lion Inn complex. This includes the main dining area for the restaurant, the pub, the bakery and multiple function rooms.

Fathman has been interested in cooking ever since he can remember. He started working at a European Bakeshop in Cincinnati at the age of 14. After running from coast to coast for a decade, and starting a punk-rock group in the process, Fathman began a prestigious job at The Waterfront in Cincinnati. The job consisted of basic "meat and potato type dishes" and Fathman said he quickly grew bored.

"I need to be excited about what I'm doing," he said. "Work is my life."

In 1991, Fathman started working at Grill 23 in Boston where he redid the menu and earned the restaurant the distinction of being named the best seafood restaurant in Boston. He said fish is his favorite delicacy.

"It can be so simple yet so exciting," he said.

Fathman said there has been a big adjustment for him coming to work in the suburbs.

"The dining community is much more conservative here," Fathman said. He tries to make the customers feel as comfortable as possible when they dine at the Red Lion Inn. He also said the lifestyle is slower in Cohasset but was quick to add how great all the people in the town have been.

Fathman is replacing chef Brendan Nolan who had been with the "new" Red Lion Inn since it opened Ordleheide said the decision to hire Fathman was any easy one because of his reputation.

"We never thought we would actually be able to get him," he said.

Fathman, who is also writing a cookbook, said he has no idea what the future holds, but right now, he's is concentrating on making eating the Red Lion Inn something special.

Cooking course for a Valentine's dinner

For the romantic gourmet, Chef Robert Fatham of The Red Lion Inn offers an "Aphrodisiac Valentine's Dinner" on Tuesday, Feb. 12. The menu will feature risotto with white truffles, oysters with creme fraiche and caviar, pan roasted lobster with a vanilla bean buerre blanc, roasted baby vegetables, and a warm chocolate cake with orange-pepper compote and cardamom ice cream. Wine will be served. The cost is $70 per person. This class will be held at The Red Lion Inn, 71 South Main Street.

For questions or to register, call the South Shore Community Center at 781-383-0088. Class size is limited.

Fighting hunger

The Stop & Shop Supermarket Company announced that the Cohasset Stop & Shop raised $597 for Well Spring to help provide hunger relief to local residents.

The money was raised as part of the annual "Food for Friends" campaign. Through the sale of paper pumpkins and turkeys and fundraising events held at the store, Stop & Shop associates and customers supported the effort to provide assistance to local hunger relief agencies. In total, Stop & Shop raised approximately $700,000 to benefit local relief agencies.

Rotary announces phone book drive

The members of the Rotary Club of Cohasset have announced the kick off of their annual Cohasset Phone Book and Buyers Guide drive.

Marking its 39th year, the Rotary Club Cohasset Phone Book has grown to become one of the most popular and widely used community resources. In addition to local phone numbers, residents have come to rely on the publication as a reference for everything from town government information to street map locations.

The Cohasset Phone Book is also viewed as the premiere buyers guide for Cohasset residents in search of goods or services. With low rates and high readership level, an advertisement in the Rotary Club Phone Book makes perfect sense for all local businesses.

All of the advertising dollars generated through the phone book are redirected in the form of support for many local organizations and charitable institutions serving Cohasset citizens. The money also helps fund annual scholarships for high school graduates and current college students.

Persons and organizations interested in finding out more about the benefits of advertising in the Rotary Club Phone Book and Buyers Guide should contact Ed Fox at Fox Associates 781-383-3000.

The Rotary Club of Cohasset is an organization of business and professional leaders united to provide humanitarian service, encourage high ethical standards in all vocations, and help build goodwill and peace in our town, state country and throughout the world. In more than 160 countries worldwide, approximately 1.2 million Rotarians belong to more than 30,000 Rotary clubs.

Chairman of Board at S.S. Chamber

The Board of Directors of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce has elected James G. Welch, CPA, as Chairman of the Board for 2002. A resident of Hingham, Welch is the managing partner of Needel, Welch & Stone, P.C., an accounting and business advisory firm in Rockland.

Welch has served as an officer and director of the Chamber for many years. He also serves on the boards of the South Shore Hospital Health and Education Foundation and the Hingham Public Library. He is a member of the Review Oversight Board of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Board of Public Accountancy.

Then-Governor Paul Cellucci appointed Welch in 2000 to the Massachusetts E-Government Task Force, which developed the state's strategic roadmap for developing and integrating the state's electronic services.

Cohasset's Beth Ahearn is Coach of the Year

AROUND TOWN

JUST A LITTLE SNOW

Hello Cohasset. I am hoping that January is going to leave rather quietly and that February brings a little bit of snow. After that, bring on the Spring!

COACH OF THE YEAR

I received a note last week from a very proud father indeed. Mr. Austin Ahearn is the father of Beth Ahearn and Beth recently was awarded Plymouth South High School's coach of the year as a well respected coach of field hockey. Beth learned how to play field hockey at Cohasset High School and went on to learn perseverance at Springfield College when she was cut from the team in her freshman year and went on to be named team captain in her senior year. Beth is coach who has never won not even one game with her team in the year 2000, but through her amazing talents of teaching respect, self-esteem and determination has won the praises of her peers and this wonderful award. Congratulations!

DEAN'S LIST AT ASSUMPTION

Jessica Stevens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Stevens was named to dean's list at Assumption College for the fall semester.

HOMEWORK ISSUES

Homework problems and issues got you down? How about attending a workshop on Wed. Feb. 6 at the Joseph Osgood School from 7-9 p.m. "Avoiding Disaster: The Homework Dilemma" is the topic and Dr. Jerome J. Shultz, Ph.D is the person who will give the workshop. Dr. Shultz is from the Learning Lab at Leslie College, is a former Special Education teacher and is an expert on LD and ADHD with more than 30 years of experience. This program is being sponsored by the Parents Advisory Councils of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull-South Shore Regional PAC. This is open to everyone and has free admission. Any questions can be asked by calling 781-383-9242 or 781-383-3075.

ACADEMIC HONORS

Kayvon Michael Tehranian, a sophomore at Noble and Greenough School has earned academic honors for the first semester. Great work, Kayvon. I know how proud your mom and dad are.

DEAN'S LIST AT COLBY

Ashley Mihos, Caitlin Slodden, Lauren Smith and Jessie Zerendow were all named to the dean's list for the fall semester at Colby College. Ashley and Lauren are the class of 2005 and Caitlin and Jessie are the class of 2004. Keep up the great work ladies!

HONORS AT LEHIGH

Amanda Gontarz was named to the dean's list at Lehigh University for the fall semester. This is a great accomplishment for you Amanda.

THAYER HONORS

The Thayer Academy Upper School Honor Roll for the first term and first semester was released and Christina Daniels, Malcolm Stansell, Michael Ernst and Suzanne Lewis all were recipients of this honor. Fantastic!

ORGAN CONCERT

Cohasset's Second Congregational Church is hosting an Organ Concert on Sunday, Feb. 10 at 3 p.m., to celebrate the arrival of their new, state-of-the-art digital organ. Roger Mansen, a professional organist will be playing and showcasing the organ's capabilities with a selection of music ranging from spiritual to pop. This is a free event to the public with refreshments being served. For more information, call 781-383-0345.

WATCH THE GAME AT TEEN GARAGE

There will be a Super Bowl Party at the Teen Garage on Sunday, Feb. 3 to watch the Patriots and the Rams fight it out on the field. The cost is $5 per person which includes all the pizza the hungry fans can eat while the supporters watch the game on the big screen TV — plus four other regular-sized TVs.

CAROLLING

Margaret Campbell, who lives in the senior housing complex off Elm Street, enjoys listening to local Girl Scouts, who serenaded the residents with Christmas Carols just before the holidays.

The party will start one hour prior to kick-off and youngsters must be picked up within a half-hour after the game is over.

SWING INTO SPRING GALA

Mark your calendar for Friday, March 15 at 7:30 p.m. when the Cohasset Maritime Institute (CMI) will host a "Swing Into Spring" Gala Event at the Cohasset Lighthouse Keeper's Residence. The festivities will include food and drink, live music and a silent auction to help kick-off the 2002 season.

CMI Director, Jack Buckley says this event "not only marks the start of a new season, it also marks the start of a fund-raising campaign for new and improved ways to get people on the water!"

"CMI is planning to host a fun evening for returning and new members and their guests," Mr. Buckley says. Join in the festivities and renew old friendships, make new acquaintances, and to learn what's new at CMI this season.

For more information, call Jack Buckley at 781-383-8261 or Mary Sease at 781-383-8318.

DROWNED HOGS TAKE A DIP

Since the 19th-century, America has eagerly awaited the emergence of Punxsutawney Phil from his den each year. Tradition has it that if the ground hog sees his shadow and returns to its burrow, spring will be late in coming. In that same vein, a hearty group of men and women, known as the Drowned Hogs take to the waters of Nantasket Beach in Hull to try to outwit Pennsylvania's best by predicting spring's arrival.

And if past predictions are any indication, the Drowned Hogs have developed a better gauge than their Pennsylvania cousin. It works like this: if the Drowned Hogs frolic in the icy brine on the Saturday before Ground Hog Day, and all submerge before returning, then spring is just around the corner. But if even one fails, winter will be long and hard.

"We haven't been wrong in predicting the arrival of spring since we started in '96," says Drowned Hogs Co-founder, Al Bollinger. "We have a better record than Punxsutawney Phil."

It always proves a good time and benefits the Wellspring Multi-Service Center. The Drowned Hogs took their first dip in the chilly Atlantic on Feb. 2, 1996. Since then, the event has grown with hundreds of registered swimmers, thousands of spectators lining the sea wall, and more than $20,000 raised at last year's 2001 splash-down.

The event will be held Saturday, Feb. 2 at noon, at the Mary Jeanette Murray Bath House on Nantasket Avenue.

To become a swimmer, to sponsor, or to learn more about the Drowned Hogs, call 781-925-3211 or visit their Web site at www.DrownedHogs.com for more details.

That is all the news for this week. Please send me your news no later than Mondays by noon. Because of time frames and computer glitches at any given time, I will no longer be able to accept any items for the current weeks column after noon on Mondays.

Relay chief understands the need for cancer cure

Lost both parents to the disease

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Gordon Behrer knows firsthand the grief associated with cancer.

After losing both of his parents to the disease, Behrer has become involved with the American Cancer Society's effort to find a cure and provide services for those who are afflicted with cancer.

Behrer is beginning his fourth year of involvement with the American Cancer Society's Cohasset Relay For Life and serve as its chairman for the second consecutive year. The event is slated for May 17-18 at Alumni Field.

The relay includes participants from Hull, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate who participate in an effort to raise money for the American Cancer Society. Participants, who garner sponsors for the event, are divided into teams — the goal is to have someone from every team walking around the track for 20 consecutive hours. However, Behrer says the event is not all about the money that is raised.

"It's about seeing people who have had similar experiences," he said. "It's knowing you can share your experience with others."

Behrer said it has taken him quite some time to be able to talk about the terrible disease, and it is still a very emotional time for him at the relay.

"The tears shed there are supportive ones," he said. "I try not to look at it a sad time but rather as a celebration for those who have survived."

Behrer said his favorite part of the relay is the Luminaria which takes place during the opening ceremonies. In the weeks and months leading to the relay, the ACS sells candles to the public. The candles serve as memorials to those who have died and honor those who have survived. During the ceremony, the candles are lit illuminating the track. Last year there were close to 4,000 candles burning through the night.

"That's one of the most emotional times of the entire evening," Behrer said. "You can really feel the closeness with all the participants at that moment."

Behrer said another moving experience, which occurs during the opening ceremonies, is the survivors' lap. He said the lap is so powerful because while the men, women, and children are making their way around the track, "you see cancer doesn't discriminate."

Behrer became involved with the ACS relay to help make a difference. Although he said he is doubtful a cure will be found in his lifetime, he's optimistic that one day, the answer will be found.

"Thirty-five years ago cancer was the 'C' word, it was a death sentence" Behrer said. "But now we're making good headway and people are surviving."

In 1996, Behrer became involved with the relay but soon realized he wanted more responsibility.

"There's a need for the job to be done, for funds to be raised and support to be given," he said. "That's what drives me."

As chairman of the event, Behrer helps orchestrate logistics, publicity, ceremonies and team recruitment. He said without the effort of others the event wouldn't be as big of a success as it is.

Gordon Behrer is chairman of the Relay for Life in Cohasset, which takes place May 17-18 at Alumni Field.

"We have a great committee that really helps me out," he said.

Behrer, who grew up in Long Island and currently resides in North Quincy, said families often bring tents to camp in and grills to cook food while trying to stay the course of the 20-hour relay.

Last year, the event had about 700 participants including 49 cancer survivors and raised more than $120,000. The Taste of the Relay, which sells food donated by various restaurants, raised close to $2,000 last year. Participants can look forward to great food again this year.

Last year, 11 Relay For Life events took place around southeast Massachusetts raising more than $2.3 million for the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, advocacy and local patient services.

The Relay started 15 years ago with Dr. Gordon Klatt walking around a track in Tacoma, Washington to raise money for cancer research. The following year, 220 supporters on 19 teams joined Dr. Klatt in this overnight event and the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life was born.

The kickoff for the relay begins on Feb. 12 at PJ's Country House in Scituate. There will be two informational sessions, the first will be from 6-6:45 p.m. and is for newcomers to the relay the second is from 7-8 p.m. and is for veteran relayers. For more information contact Behrer at 617-770-7989 or the American Red Cross at 1-888-648-4880, extension 229.

Relay kick-off is Feb. 12

In anticipation of the American Cancer Society's sixth annual Relay For Life in Cohasset, the volunteer planning committee is hosting a kick-off on Tuesday, Feb. 12 from 6-8 p.m. at PJ.'s Country House, 227 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Route 3A in Scituate. Area residents hoping to start a relay team for the first time or just interested in learning more about Relay For Life are encouraged to join this informational session from 6-7 p.m. Veteran team members are welcome to join at 7 p.m. The kickoff is an opportunity to hear about last year's results, preview this year's event and receive team captain packets and materials. Hors d'ouvres will be served and there will be a cash bar.

For more information, contact Event Chair, Gordon Behrer at 617-770-7989 or email him at gcbehrer@aol.com; or Mary Shepherd at the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880 and press 3 for Ext. 229.

The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset is set for Friday and Saturday, May 17 and 18 at Cohasset High School. Relay For Life is the cancer society's signature activity taking place in more than 3,000 communities nationwide. Last year, 11 events were held in towns across southeast Massachusetts raising $2.3 million for American Cancer Society programs of research, education, advocacy and local patient services. This unique, overnight, community event allows individuals from all walks of life to join in the fight against cancer. The event raises cancer awareness while serving as a celebration for cancer survivors, a memorial for loved ones lost, and a rally for the community.

If you are interested in finding out more about the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life, please call 1-800-ACS-2345. The American Cancer Society is the nationwide, community-based, voluntary health organization dedicated to eliminating cancer as a major health problem by preventing this disease, saving lives, and diminishing suffering from cancer through research, education, advocacy and service.

The future of town's new history book looks bright

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Town History Committee updated selectmen Tuesday on the progress of the next volume of the town history, "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume 3."

Wigmore Pierson of 123 Atlantic Ave. and chairman of the committee, informed the board that everything is right on schedule.

"We here to say we do not need any more money," joked Pierson.

The committee has pre-sold more than 400 copies and anticipates that hundreds more will be sold. The group has put countless hours of effort into the book and is pleased to see the work coming to fruition.

"This has been a tremendous team effort," Pierson said.

During the meeting Jim Hamilton, 298 King St., showed selectmen what the cover of the book will look like. It's a color aerial shot taken of Cohasset by Margot Cheel, a member of the committee.

"The cover looks really great," said Selectman Merle Brown.

According to Harold Coughlin, 25 Reservoir Road, by the end of next week the first chapter should be completely finished and ready to go to press. The committee is aiming to finish the book by mid-March and wants to send it to the printer by April. Copies should be available by mid-summer.

> "This has been a tremendous team effort."
> — Wigmore Pierson, book committee

Author Jacqueline Dormitzer, 334 S. Main St., said she would love to have the book used in the high school to educate students about Cohasset. She said the book is very comprehensive and there is a lot of explanation about how the town government works.

"It might prove useful to us," joked Selectman Tom Callahan.

Pierson suggested the money that the book raises be used to develop a curriculum about Cohasset history.

Although the writing of the book is complete, there is still a lot of work to be done. All the photos that were selected for the book need to be scanned and the text needs to be formatted.

The 416-page book aims to cover the events, happening and changes in Cohasset from 1950 to 2000. Residents will have an opportunity to order the book when their Annual Town Meeting warrant arrives. There will be an order form for the book in the warrant.

"I just want to thank the entire committee and I think I speak for everyone when I say I can't wait for the book to come out," said Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed.

'Encore!' concert is Feb. 9

The Unicorn Singers and the Broad Cove Chorale, two of the South Shore's choral ensembles, will combine to present "Encore!" a pops/cabaret style performance at St. Anthony's Parish Hall on South Main Street, Cohasset on Saturday, Feb. 9 at 8 p.m. and again Sunday, Feb. 10 at 3 p.m.

This year's "Encore!" will feature costumed medleys from the Broadway shows, "Oklahoma!" and "Most Happy Fella," along with other lighthearted selections of jazz, barbershop, folk, pop and classical music. Both choruses, under the direction of Margo Euler, are noted for their creative presentations and the concert is a lively and colorful mid-winter pick-me-up!

Seating for the concert is at tables and in the pops tradition, audience members are encouraged to bring a festive picnic to enjoy during the performance.

Tickets for "Encore!" are $15 ($10 for students and seniors on Sunday) and are available at Nobles in Hingham Square or at Cards & Shards in Cohasset. For more information, call 781-749-6561.

Hands off injured wildlife

We could hear the concern in her voice when Meg Hanrahan, the animal control officer in Hull, called us last week for help. A well-meaning man had stopped to help what appeared to be an injured raccoon. She said he put it in a box where it would be safe until help arrived and drove off.

At the time of the initial phone call, Ms. Hanrahan provided us with a description of the car – but because we're a weekly newspaper, there was little we could do for several days.

Neighbors called the New England Wildlife Center to come to pick up the raccoon that appeared to be sick by "acting drunk" when it crossed the street. The raccoon died the next day at the wildlife center and later, tested positive for rabies.

Ms. Hanrahan received a copy of the test results and then set about trying to find the Good Samaritan who unknowingly was exposed to the disease by coming in contact with the sick raccoon. Neighbors on Atlantic Avenue in Hull provided her with a color and make of the car, which was — through good detective work involving both Ms. Hanrahan and Cohasset police and Cohasset's Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy – traced to a Cohasset resident, who was offered the rabies vaccine.

"Sick or hurt wild animals don't know you're there to help," Ms. Hanrahan said. "Therefore, they might bite."

She said, in this case, neighbors thought the raccoon had been hit by a car because it was "wobbling" across the street. Then the Cohasset man stopped to help and pushed it into a box where the animal stayed until representatives from the wildlife center arrived. Ms. Hanrahan also said one of the neighbors had reportedly been feeding the raccoon and may have also been exposed to rabies that is transmitted through saliva.

This incident should serve as an important reminder to us all to keep our hands off any injured or sick wildlife. Let's all remember to leave handling wildlife up to experienced experts. Those of us who love animals find that hard to do, but the specter of contracting rabies should provide us with a good deterrent.

Burning season is underway

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis through May 1 for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch Center at 781-383-0260 from 9 am.-2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance, the fire department says. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact the issuing of permits. Burning hours are 10 a.m.-4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forest debris. Burning shall be conducted on land nearest to the place were the debris came from. Burning must be conducted at least 75 feet away from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover.

While burning, the fire must be attended at all times until completely extinguished. Have a water hose, rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Postponing run for school board spot

TO THE EDITOR:

Last year at this time, I had decided to run for a seat on the Cohasset School Committee. I asked members of our community to consider me, my past accomplishments around town and my ability to listen and communicate their concerns and to take action when necessary. They responded positively and after campaigning with all our heart and reaching out to all members of our community, I am proud to remind you that we lost by only two votes! Who says that one vote can't make a difference?

It is campaign season here in Cohasset once again. This year the School Committee landscape is a little different, as there will not be an incumbent seeking reelection. This leaves room for the introduction of new perspectives and new lines of communication. After the careful consideration of my family, my friends and supporters and my continuing commitment to the successful completion of the school renovation projects, I feel that I can best serve the community by postponing my candidacy until next year.

I wish to thank all those who continue to support my commitment to our schools and to our community. Please look for me in 2003!

Let me tell you where I'm coming from

MY VIEW

EVAN SCHIFF

I was warned not to do this. My roommates begged me not to.

"How can you rip the Patriots," they said. "This is their time, just let them have it."

Hmmph, I scoffed. Why would I ever compromise my journalistic integrity to please championship starved New England fans? I don't think the Pats are deserving of a Super Bowl berth, so why hide that fact? Maybe because I like my face configured the way it is but hey, I live on the edge.

Before I continue, let's take a step back to understand where I'm coming from.

Ever since the Eagles got eliminated on Sunday and the Patriots advanced to the big dance I've struggled with my sport psyche. Whom do I root for?.

During the first football game on Sunday, I admit it, I was rooting for the Pats to pull off the upset. However, it was only for selfish reasons.

If the Pats win, the Eagles would have an easy road at the Super Bowl, I reasoned to myself.

Plus, I thought I'd make a ton of dough ripping off all the fans who are going to foolishly lay their money on the Patriots. But then a funny thing happened, the Eagles lost.

Whoa is me I lamented. My dream season has come to a crashing halt and I now faced a fork in the road and was unprepared to commit to either avenue. Root for the Rams, or cheer for the Patriots.

It would be easy to root for the Rams. They beat the Eagles so if they win, I can justify the Eagles loss as losing to the best team in football. Plus, the Rams have the most prolific offense in the history of the game and are a pleasure to watch march down the field. But how can I root for a 14-point favorite, cheering for the underdog is always more satisfying. Go Pats, right? Well, maybe.

I tried to convince myself to like them, I really did. I got on the Brady bandwagon, then the Bledsoe bandwagon, and now I think I'm back on the Brady train, at least for the time being. And what's wrong with me, I live in New England and should be first in-line at the bar on Sunday with my Bryan Cox jersey on.

I've been bleeding Philadelphia sports for 22 years...

However, it's hard to get caught up in the emotion of a city when your heart isn't entirely in it. Yea, sure I'd love to be at a bar boozing it up and join the Pats fans in celebrating a Super Bowl win into the wee hours of the morning. But I also wouldn't mind throwing some back while all the Patriots backers are miserable and fighting over whether Brady or Bledsoe should have started. Call it bitterness, call it jealousy, it's the truth.

My indecisiveness comes down to an interesting dichotomy. Would I rather be silently content in a room full of disheartened Patriots fans or, would I rather be upset in a room crowded with wild, celebrating, inebriated chowdah-heads? Why can't I just enjoy the game? I'll tell you.

I'm insanely jealous that people will be watching the game on Sunday with a vested interest even though it doesn't concern a bet. I've been listening to the sports talk stations with a heavy heart, wishing the DJ's were talking about stopping McNabb instead of Warner.

I don't particularly want to see the smiling faces at Town Hall on Monday as I trudge in with sadness stitched to my sleeve. I deserve to see my team win a championship don't I? I've been bleeding Philadelphia sports for 22 years and have yet to have a sniff of finishing a season with my team hoisting a trophy. I admit my basketball team and baseball team have won their respective titles since I've been alive but I was hardly cognizant as a three-year-old. You New England folk whine about the Red Sox drought, imagine rooting for the equivalent of the Red Sox in four sports.

Plus, isn't it just jumping on the bandwagon, which I can't stand, if I root for the Pats? Would you really want me sharing in your joy on this day? My answer is probably not, especially now.

So what is a football fan to do? I tell you, I'll probably be raising my glass to the Pats on Sunday rooting for a good game. If they win, I'll be happy. Happy like when your sibling does something better than you, or beating your girlfriend in mini-golf knowing she's not talking to you after that. Believe me, both are bitter sweet.

So, go Pats, take it to 'em on Sunday and make Boston proud. Oh yea, 1918.

The Great Backyard Bird Count - you can help!

A BIRDER'S-EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

There are more than 7,800,000 square miles in the United States and Canada combined. Where in this huge area do the birds go in the winter? How do weather, snow cover and temperature affect where they go? There is some evidence that fewer robins will winter over in their breeding grounds when there is deep snow cover. Will some species push farther north than usual? Carolina Wrens and Red-bellied woodpeckers have both been extending their ranges northward in recent years. Will irruptive species such as winter finches, crossbills and grosbeaks move farther south than usual to find areas with more abundant food supplies? These are some of the questions scientists are interested in. To help find the answers, they turn once again to amateur volunteers.

Taking a survey at the end of winter should show the number of birds that have survived the harsher weather of December and January.

What is the GBBC?

The Great Backyard Bird Count is a joint project of National Audubon Society and Cornell Lab of Ornithology. It is sponsored this year by Wild Birds Unlimited. During the first GBBC, 14,000 people reported more than a half million birds during the four day weekend. Last year 53,343 people reported 442 species and 4,555,411 individual birds. The United States and Canada have been involved from the beginning. Last year a few Latin American sites were added. As time goes on, perhaps it will become a hemispheric event.

How does it work?

Do you have a bird feeder? Do you like to look at birds? If so, you are invited to participate in the Great Backyard Bird Count. There is no charge for joining this effort. You can spend as little as 15 minutes or as many hours as you wish. You can count birds in your yard or at any other area you might like to visit. If you count while taking a walk, please keep the distance to less than a mile.

When do the counts take place?

This year the GBBC is scheduled for the four-day weekend of Feb. 15-18. You can count on just one day or on as many as four days. The month of February was chosen for several reasons. From a practical point of view, this is a month when people tend to be less involved with other natural history projects. Taking a survey at the end of winter should show the number of birds that have survived the harsher weather of December and January. These will be the ones that are ready to breed either here or at the end of a migration route.

How to report results

Write down the species you see, followed by the number you have counted. Later if you see a higher number, revise the figure. Do not add numbers together; use only the highest number seen at any one time. This way you will be sure not to count the same bird twice. Keep track of the time spent watching as well. Separate lists should be kept for each day and each location. To report your results, you will need access to the Internet. If this is not available at home, you can use the computers at the library. Go to <http://birdsource.cornell.edu/> and click on "Show me how". Then go to "Submit your bird checklist" to record your results. Any birds seen which are not listed can be added as "write-in" species.

Quality control

You may wonder about the quality of the data collected by thousands of amateurs with a potential for miscounting or misidentifying birds. To prevent the worst errors, the birds reported are checked against regional lists. If you report a pelican in Vermont in February, it will be deleted. If you report 300 cardinals in your backyard within a 15-minute period, it will be rejected. The scientists are more interested in common birds than they are in rarities, so if you see an unusual bird that you can't easily identify, don't worry about it. "Write-in" birds will be evaluated before being accepted.

Watching the results on the Web

The Birdsource URL is an interactive Web site with animated maps and graphs. These are updated every hour as the data come in, making it possible to watch the results as they change. Look up the numbers from previous years. Check out the "Maproom". Choose a particular species and see where it is on the map. Compare results from different states and provinces. Study the "Top Ten" lists. There are also identification helps if you need them.

The importance of collecting data

Birds move around. Their whereabouts are not static. Mapping data collected during a particular period of time can help show patterns and trends in the movements and size of bird populations. The data from the Great Backyard Bird Count will be studied in conjunction with data from the Christmas Bird Count and from Project FeederWatch. The Christmas Bird Count has been going for more than a hundred years. Project FeederWatch is in its 15th season. Now the GBBC is about to happen for the fifth year in a row. The scientific value of all these counts increases with the number of people participating and with the number of years the data are collected. Therefore, I hope you will consider joining the GBBC.

Joanne Norton is Master Bander for the New England Wildlife Center, and counts birds for FeederWatch, WetlandWatchers and International Shorebird Surveys.

Move over Dan Quayle

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

"Correct spelling," once wrote the social critic H. L. Menken, "is one of the arts that are far more esteemed by schoolma'arms than by practical men."

(He also wrote that "no man is genuinely happy, married, who has to drink worse gin than he used to drink when he was single," but this column is about spelling so we'll have to wait until the sun goes over the yardarm to deal with strong drink.)

I'm afraid that I and a number of my fellow columnists from the left wing liberal media are going to have to apologize to Dan Quayle, George the 41st's favorite right wing reactionary vice president.

Remember how we pilloried him for spelling "potatoe" to an impressionable class of youngsters and how surprised we were when Western Civilization survived, the sun came up in the East and the Yankees continued to win the American League pennant?

Well, the other day Robert Reich, everyone's favorite left wing liberal Democrat — and the only one under five feet tall — came out with his announcement for governor in which he "sited" his experience as secretary of labor with the Clinton Administration, an experience most people are trying to forget.

Remember how we pilloried him for spelling 'potatoe' to an impressionable class of youngsters...

And he described his current occupation as a professor at "Brandies" University, a claim that must have made his bosses at the real Brandeis University seriously consider sending him back to sixth-grade spelling class or at least remove him from the Brandeis spelling team.

As if to prove that he can misspell 'em with the best of vice presidents, Reich and his people then whipped out a fundraising letter in which they referred to former Gov. Paul "Celucci," now the ambassador to Canada.

Unless the Canadian Francophones have been fooling around with the Italian dictionary, it's still "Cellucci" as far as I know.

When I was young, and ice covered most of the earth, spelling was a almost a school subject by itself, like reading and writing and arithmetic and probably would have been the fourth R if anyone could find and R in it.

Along the way I met a co-worker who used to write out his copy phonetically with the comment: "Let Jack (the editor) worry about the spelling."

I don't know how many of you have ever heard of Richard Wade.

He's a retired British advertising writer, who leads a movement to simplify the spelling of the English language. "Freespeling," he calls it. "Let's chanj the way we spel," he says.

Wade would like to prune all the silent letter from those words that are most likely to baffle contestants in spelling bees.

Who needs the "B" in debt? What difference does it make if there's a "K" in knee? Why do we need an "E" at the end of definite and donate? What does the second "R" do for the word parrot?

The last I heard of Dick Wade he was scouting around for a commercial sponsor for "freespeling" and putting 10 to 20 newly spelled words on his Web cite . . . oops, I mean "site."

See, already he has one convert who's running for governor of Massachusetts.

POLITICAL NOTES

Legislative seminar offered mid-March

The office of state Senator Robert L. Hedlund is now accepting applications for the Citizens Legislative Seminar (CLS). The program is designed to familiarize citizens first-hand with the legislature and lawmaking process. The six-week program will give CLS participants the opportunity to gain knowledge about the lawmaking process by listening to presentations from senators as well as representatives.

"The CLS is another wonderful way for constituents to become more familiarized with the legislative process," Hedlund said. "This is an exceptional program that provides citizens with a 'nuts and bolts' style education given first-hand by the very individuals responsible for lawmaking in the Commonwealth."

The Citizens Legislative Seminar will meet from mid-March to mid-April, on Wednesdays from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Specific dates will be announced soon. The seminar is open to any interested citizen. Please contact Senator Hedlund's State House office at (617) 722-1646 by Friday, Jan. 25 for information and applications.

Edwards to speak to GOP

On Wednesday, Feb. 6, the birthday of President Ronald Regan, who was born in 1911 and is the oldest-living president, Republicans will celebrate his birthday with dinner at the John Carver Inn at Plymouth. Republicans from Bristol, Barnstable, Plymouth and Norfolk Counties are invited to the 6 p.m. social hour, followed by dinner at 7 p.m., and a meeting at 8 p.m.

Congressman Mickey Edwards of Oklahoma, who headed Regan's committee in Oklahoma is now teaching at the Kennedy School of Government and Harvard Law School.

Chairman of Division Five said reservations are required and may be made with Lawyer Novak at 508-587-8400; Polly Logan at 781-383-0031; Jason Kenney at 508-673-3637; Hazel Costa at 508-674-8153; Randy Cabral at 508-673-3637; Ann Wolf at 508-763-8866; Chris Fava at 508-746-6239; Kathy McGilvary at 508-745-6044; Tom Barry at 617-834-6763; Irene Schall at 508-944-3393; Darrin McAuliffe at 617-843-9520; and Judy Folsom-Roberts at 617-471-2370. These people are also available for further information.

Attendees will also hear and meet the Chief of Staff for Governor Swift, Peter Forman; the GOP Leader of the House, Rep. Fran Marini; District Attorney Tim Cruz; Rep. Viriato Manuel DeMacedo; GOP State Chair, Kerry Murphy Healey of Beverly, and other elected and GOP leaders.

Democrats to hold caucus

Registered Democrats in Hingham will hold a caucus at the Hingham Library, Whiton Room, 66 Leavitt St. on Feb. 2 at 2 p.m. to elect 11 delegates and six alternates to the 2001 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. Delegates will be divided equally between men and women.

The convention will be held on Friday, May 31 and Saturday, June 1 at the Worcester Centrum in Worcester. The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Hingham. Candidates for delegate and alternate must consent to nomination in writing. All candidates may make a two-minute statement and may distribute materials on their own behalf. All ballots will be written and secret. All candidates must be present at the caucus to be elected. Those not elected as delegate and alternate may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority, and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 10 Granite St., Quincy 02169, no later than 10 days after the caucus date.

For more information, call the Democratic State Committee at 617-472-0637 or the Hingham Democratic Town Committee Chair, Tom Vangel at 781-740-2757.

Bradley wants home care funds restored

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, along with 103 other members of the House of Representatives have signed a letter urging Speaker Thomas Finneran and House Chairman of Ways and Means John Rogers to restore $3.4 million in vital home care funds. The signatories constitute a majority in the 160-member House of Representatives, which represents more than the number of votes needed to pass a home care funding increase in a roll call vote.

The $3.4 million sought includes $2.5 million for home care management services; $738,887 for protective services against elder abuse; and, $140,535 in affordable assisted living for low-income seniors. The services provided through these funds would enable thousands of elderly residents of Massachusetts to receive assistance with the daily tasks that allow them to remain safely in their homes. Currently, 83 percent of the state's long-term care dollars are spent on institutions. In the current fiscal year budget more than $46 million for nursing home salary incentives were added, but there were no such additions to the home care budgets.

The governor has already indicated support for the restoration of these funds and the Senate had previously voted a supplemental appropriation for these accounts. It is now evident that there is also a strong majority of House members who want these funds restored.

It's the same old story with Massport

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

Since 9/11 a series of high profile newspaper articles laid Massport out in the public view: Airport security consistently caved to the airlines' wishes. Massport is a revolving door for a small clique of pols and cronies who profit directly from lush consulting contracts, made-to-order patronage posts and back-scratching election support. The director and security head were elevated by former governors from their own staff and lacked aviation credentials. The director resigned after securing a shockingly large severance package. The security head got another position with half the responsibility — director of Public Safety for the Port — but the same paycheck. Massport employed 35 people for public relations. The board was appointed by one person. It agrees to whatever is proposed to it with almost no discussion. A board member with close ties to the chairman was indicted last week. One thing I don't hear anyone express as the news stories pile up is surprise. Massport management is a patch of poison ivy that everyone sees and no one can figure out how to get cleared.

Now Massport wants the public and the FAA to take seriously the runway expansion proposal that has been working its way to the courts as the scandals grow. The runway expansion scheme was made by the same cast of characters that was caught in the scandals. It formed in their hands in the same atmosphere, standards, and greed, the same lavish consulting budgets, the same fuzzy relations with airlines and regulators and the same arrogance toward the public. That huge PR department at Massport spun stories for years to make runway expansion look like a shiny red apple that's good for us. After all the disgrace, Massport still thinks it can make the public believe an apple grows on poison ivy.

State, Rep. Bradley invited to meeting

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Selectmen have invited Bernard McCourt from the Massachusetts Highway Department and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, to their meeting Tuesday to discuss safety improvements to the Beechwood Street/Route 3A intersection.

Statistics provide by Police Chief Brian Noonan show in 2000 there were 19 accidents at the intersection with four resulting in injuries. In 2001, there were 17 accidents there with seven resulting in injury.

"It's the worst intersection in Cohasset," Noonan said.

Doug Cope, a spokesman for the Mass Highway Department, said he is interested to hear what the town would like to do with the intersection.

"The purpose of the meeting is to discuss what they'd like to see done," he said. "We're open to any suggestions the town may have."

Noonan said he would like to see one-way turning arrows to eliminate the passing lanes.

"People going through the intersection don't see the cars turning," he said. "It's just a very dangerous intersection."

While Cope wouldn't go into specifics about the cost, he did say if it's determined the intersection needs to be reworked, then financial matters would be discussed.

The invitation to McCourt and Bradley was prompted by a recent study that showed the intersection is accident-prone.

A recent study conducted by the Boston Metropolitan Planning Organization shows from 1997-1999, there were 29 accidents at the Beechwood/3A intersection, an average of 9.7 accidents per year or 1.28 per million vehicles, which is well above the state average of .89 per million vehicles for a signalized intersection. More than 40 percent of the collisions involved personal injury including one fatality in 1997.

The Massachusetts Highway Department grades intersections on level of service in relation to delays and gives the intersection an overall "B" — which means the average stop delay is about 13 seconds per vehicle.

That could change if recommended safety improvements detailed in the study are implemented. The potential changes, including allowing for left turns on a delayed green light, would add about seven seconds to the average delay and drop the intersections grade to a "C".

"Route 3A carries heavy through volume in both directions; it is difficult for the northbound and southbound left-turning traffic to find a gap," the report states. "In some cases drivers may miscalculate acceptable gaps in other time, out of frustration, drivers may try to force themselves into the through traffic."

In addition to delayed green light to allow for protected left-hand turns on 3A, the report also recommends:

- Installation of a raised median barrier to eliminate left turns in and out of the gas station driveways on 3A
- Increase the all-red clearance from one to two seconds
- Correct the pedestrian signal which is not displaying the "walk" and "don't walk" symbols.

No races yet for town election

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Only one resident pulled nomination papers this week — Ray Kasperowicz, 172 S. Main St., intends to seek reelection to the Sewer Commission.

Time is ticking away for candidates the last day to pick up papers is Feb. 14 and all papers need to be returned by Feb. 19. To be put on the ballot, a candidate must garner 50 signatures from registered voters. Annual Town Election will be on April 6.

Residents who previously pulled papers include, Glenn Pratt, 482 King St., who plans to run for reelection on the Water Commission.

Recreation Commissioner Mary K. Muncey, 377 S. Main St., is looking to serve another term and, Planning Board Chairman Al Moore, hopes to keep his seat and will be running again.

On the Board of Health, Robin Lawrence intends to seek reelection and Town Clerk Marion Douglas will also be looking to serve another term.

The following residents pulled papers earlier in the month indicating their desire to run for office.

Jane Pescatore of Lantern Lane plans to run for the open seat on the school committee being vacated by Stephanie Noble, who is not seeking reelection.

Mary Granville, 100 Beach St., will seek a seat on the Board of Assessors.

Roger Lowe, also of 100 Beach St., plans to run for reelection to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees and, Roger Q. Hill, 17A Highland Ave., intends to run for an open position on the Board of Selectmen.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Fred Koed both plan to run again for their seats on the Board of Selectmen.

Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees Sheila Evans and Roger Whitley are looking to serve another term. Ralph Perroncello, 10 Pleasant St., hopes to keep his seat on the Cohasset Housing Authority and Town Moderator George Marlette pulled papers for another term.

Four candidates are officially on the ballot after collecting the required 50 signatures from residents. Mary Granville, Roger Lowe, Ralph Perroncello and Roger Whitley are the first four citizens to secure a place on the ballot.

For more information contact Marion Douglas at the Town Clerk's office, 781-383-4100.

Positions for elected office

Nomination papers for the annual town election for 2002 are available at the Town clerk's Office. In order to hold an elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be available:

Group: petitions will allow for more input

Articles aimed at increasing voter participation on key issues

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Some residents in town are concerned that Town Meeting may not be the best form of government for Cohasset.

That's why the Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers have submitted two citizen petition articles for the annual Town Meeting warrant to try and correct what the group perceives as a problem.

The first article requests the town go to a Special Election for all money articles voted at Town Meeting which are $25,000 or more, and are outside any department's operating budget. An appropriation of $25,000 or more would still be voted on at Town Meeting and, if it garners the necessary approval there, it would be moved to an election.

The group believes this would encourage more participation in town government.

"Town Meeting is very poorly attended which allows the will of the few to make decisions of many," said Rich Silvia who signed the citizens petition and is part of the taxpayers association.

The group, which tried to get a similar article passed in 1999, feels many in town are unable to attend Town Meeting for various reasons including work, illness and family commitment, but with the election held on a Saturday, more people would have a say.

"We could have 2,000 people deciding these issues rather than 250," said CCT member Leland Jenkins, of 198 Jerusalem Road. He said many seniors in town complain that Town Meeting runs too late and has poor seating. "Town Meeting is not a friendly place anymore," he said.

Jenkins, who was on the Advisory Board for six years, said most of the spending in town is determined by a small section of voters. He said the article is not trying to hinder the town but aims to please all sides.

Jenkins went on to say this form of government would give the average person more power.

> "Town Meeting is not a friendly place anymore."
> — Leland Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road.

"This is better for the community as a whole," he said.

But not everyone sees the benefits.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, for one, is opposed to the change. He said the state Legislature established Town Meeting as the town's form of government and it has worked.

"By making people vote on an article after it has already been approved at Town Meeting goes against the integrity of Town Meeting," Haddad said.

Selectman Merle Brown agreed with Haddad and said if this article passed it would discourage people from going to Town Meeting at all.

"This just creates more havoc and extra steps," Brown said. "It does not allow Town Meeting to do what it is supposed to do."

Members of the taxpayers group said the article is not designed to discourage participation, but rather to facilitate it. They note that if a voter can't go to the polls on Election Day, he or she can still vote by absentee ballot.

"But if you cannot attend Town Meeting, you cannot decide any of the financial questions of the town, which may directly affect your ability to remain in Cohasset," CCT stated in its informational summary of the article.

The second article the Concerned Cohasset Taxpayers has placed on the warrant would establish a petition process for citizens to go directly to the voters for a proposed bylaw or resolution. It would require a minimum of 15 percent of the registered voters in town and the signatures would have to be certified by the Town Clerk before the question could be put on the ballot.

Leonora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, said this in another attempt to get the entire town involved with an issue rather than those who can sit through a lengthy Town Meeting.

"People just seem to pay more attention to an issue when it's on a ballot," she said.

Jenkins went on to say that many people she has talked with have become disenfranchised with Town Meeting and have decided not to attend.

"What is the use of Town Meeting if is just becomes packed with proponents of an issue who leave after their article is heard," she said. "This is not the way Town Meeting is supposed to be run."

Voters will have a chance to act on both articles at Town Meeting on March 30. The two petitions have met the necessary signature requirement in order to be placed on the warrant.

We'll give you something to smile about.

Underground utilities before Planning Board

The Planning Board has scheduled a public hearing at Town Hall for Feb. 6 relative to the underground utility conversion project in Cohasset Village.

For underground utilities to become an option, for approximately the next six years Cohasset residents and business owners would have to agree to add $2 a month to an average $100 phone and electric bill, and approximately 90 cents to a monthly cable bill.

Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, said if this is something the residents want, now is the time to act.

"If there ever was a time do this, it is now," he said. "While the village is already being dug up, it's not that much more of a cost and effort to have the contractor bury the lines."

The 2 percent surcharge program requires the approval of 2002 Annual Town Meeting which can authorize the implementation of a 2 percent betterment fee.

"Aesthetically, it will open up the beauty of the village," Rizzo said. "As well, if the utility lines are removed from the street it will provide a better flowing pedestrian environment and, will create more parking spaces in some areas."

Ingber, a C.H.S. junior, took two second place finishes against a powerhouse Nauset squad, and won both the 50 and 100-meter freestyle races versus Oliver Ames. Swain, an S.H.S. freshman, took a first in the breaststroke versus Nauset and won the 500-meter freestyle in the OA meet. These two swimmers also contributed to a first place finish in the 200-meter relay versus OA.

A familiar site for Cohasset hockey fans: Greg O'Connell (#8) leaving defenders in his dust.

This apple didn't fall far

Cohasset hockey star O'Connell casting his own large shadow

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Even the most disinterested of observers would have a tough time keeping their eyes off number 8 for the Cohasset hockey team.

Included in the Cohasset star's two-goal, three-assist effort in Saturday's 6-2 win over Rockland was a two on-three rush that saw two Rockland defenders lining him up as they backpedaled slowly toward the blue line, obviously intent on standing him up there in order to draw the off sides.

Rather than zigging or zagging to go around one of these defenders, however, as both Rockland player were no doubt expecting, the lanky kid with the number 8 jersey accelerated on a path right between them, leaping to avoid the tangle of feet as he absorbed contact on both sides. But he popped through clean on the other side and, more amazingly, the puck was still with him. He then faked a pass to linemate Rob Carpenter on the left, freezing Rockland goalie Dan Dun just long enough to put him at a disadvantage for the 30-foot bullet that followed. Dunn was able to get a bit of his blocker on it, but not enough…6-2, Cohasset.

"Wow, that looked like a move straight out of the NHL," said one Rockland fan who either had not caught the name or did not make the connection.

Funny he should say that about Greg O'Connell, the son of the most famous hockey dad in New England: Mike O'Connell, the former Boston Bruins player and current Bruins General Manager.

Such moves have by now become almost commonplace for fans of the Cohasset High hockey team, particularly of late. The chip off the old block has posted an eye-popping 26 points in the Skippers last six games, increasing his South Shore League best total to 35 (17 goals, 18 assists).

"Greg is a much more complete and mature player this year," noted

They're for real!

Cohasset skaters stay unbeaten with first win over powerhouse Hanover in 14 years

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

So how many post-season wins will it take for the Cohasset hockey team to top the thrill of last Wednesday's 5-4 win over Hanover?

A state championship or Sectional title would no doubt do it, but anything less…don't bet on it.

"That was just a huge stepping stone for this program," said veteran Cohasset coach Dennis Walsh of the 5-4 win for his now 11-0-1 team. "We've had a good year, but this helped convince the kids we really are for real."

"That was just a huge stepping stone for this program. We've had a good year, but this helped convince the kids we really are for real."

Cohasset hockey coach Dennis Walsh after win over Hanover

A little perspective. The last time Cohasset beat Hanover — who, incidentally, is the defending Div. 3 state champ — many of the stars in Wednesday's win hadn't even cut their first teeth. That victory came in January of 1987.

In all 14 of the seasons that have followed that ancient win, the Skippers met the Indians twice as league rivals in regular season play. So that's 27 or 28 consecutive losses. The 2001-02 season marked the first elective meeting in many years, as Hanover was bumped up to the Patriot League as part of the Pilgrim Conference realignment this past fall. Needless to say, coach Walsh, who was there for the 1987 win as well, is pretty tickled right now over his decision to accept this match-up.

Walsh, in his 30th and final season on the Skippers' bench, said his team entered the game with a "great intensity level," something it didn't take the Indians long to find out for themselves, as the Skippers out-shot them 15-2 in the opening period to take a 2-0 lead into the first break.

South Shore League leading scorer Greg O'Connell (17 goals- 18 assists—35 points) put the Skippers on the board first and then assisted on tally number two by linemate Rob Carpenter.

Hanover cut the deficit in half early in the second frame, but Mike Rasmussen gave the Skippers back their two-goal cushion late in the period. After Indians goalie Matt DiGiacomo stopped his initial salvo, the gritty sophomore winger stuck with the play, fending off a check to re-collect the puck and flip it over the downed goaltender.

The Indians showed their champion spirit by peppering Cohasset goalie Dan Kinchla with shots early in the third, managing to sneak two past the senior stalwart.

It was the upstart Cohasset team, however, which features only six seniors on its varsity roster, that had the final word. O'Connell potted back-to-back answering goals down the stretch to exorcise the Hanover curse once an for all.

The Indians did add the game's final tally in the last minute of play, though, to make the waning moments interesting.

Boys get first win

Hoopsters still clinging to post-season hopes

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

In consecutive games, the Cohasset High boys basketball team put together one of its ugliest performances and one of its best performances of the season.

The Skippers got lit up Friday night by the high-flying Norwell Clippers, a team that has been playing some of the best basketball in the state recently. Cohasset responded on Tuesday though, recording their first South Shore League victory of the year, a 47-41 win in Mashpee.

"It's like getting a gorilla off our back," said 11th year coach Ron Ford, able to smile after an SSL contest for the first time in nine tries. "We are way passed the monkey stage."

The Skippers have had some very rough losses in league this year. The Skippers outplayed Abington for all but the first two minutes of the game, but lost by 12. They were tied with Norton at halftime but fell apart in the second half. And of course, the hardest loss to take was the two point setback to Hull last week. This game saw the Skippers score just eight points in the first half.

In the contest against Mashpee, the opening 16 minutes looked eerily reminiscent of the loss to the Pirates, with the teams going into the break with the hosts up 18-13. Shooting poorly, but determined not to let this one slip away, the Skippers made a clean start to the second half, opening up a five point lead.

"We had a good second half,"

Prospects brighten for CHS grapplers

Dan Littauer returns from injury way ahead of schedule

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Things really couldn't be going much better these days for the Cohasset High wrestling team…that is with one major exception.

Matt Casey, the 142-pound standout, broke his arm last Wednesday in match action versus Norwell, ending his surprisingly strong freshman campaign.

"That was a tough blow for Matt and the team because he was really getting better and better," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "He might have surprised some people at sectionals."

While the team didn't lose much, if anything, at 142 pounds, with sophomore Ian Hickey now sliding into that role full-time, the injury did deplete the depth somewhat, as Sweeney often moved things around within the weight classes to maximize scoring potential by wrestling both Hickey and Casey.

Dan Littauer . . . he's baaack!

Fortunately, Sweeney may be getting back some of that flexibility and a lot more in the form of captain Dan Littauer. The senior, who wrestles at 154 pounds, was Cohasset's clear favorite to advance far into the states this season before suffering a dislocated elbow in practice days before the season opener, an injury doctors told him at the time had likely ended his high school wrestling career.

But Littauer attended therapy daily with noted Cohasset Physical Therapist Peter Stone, and worked out regularly with personal trainer Joe Hayes, and this week received clearance from his doctor to resume wrestling activity.

Dan went through his first full practice on Monday with the team, and Sweeney said it was to be a match time decision whether he would wrestle in yesterday's huge league showdown with Carver.

"Dan has just worked his butt off to get back way ahead of schedule," reported Sweeney. "He was primed for this season like no wrestler I've ever seen, and it's just like he wouldn't be denied. He's still not all the way back, but we'll see. If anyone can do it, he can."

Even without Littauer and Casey, Cohasset pulled out two of three matches in Saturday's quad meet at home, topping Whitman-Hanson and Durfee in thrilling fashion, but falling to powerhouse Wayland, 51-21.

The win over W-H was particularly hair-raising. After a match full of exciting twists and turns, both literally and figuratively, the whole shooting match came down to the bout at 142 pounds with Ian Hickey. Cohasset actually led by five points at the time, 33-28, but had already conceded the forfeit for six points at 147, having no one to wrestle that match due to the injury to Casey.

Hickey won the decisive match on points, 7-1, to wrap up the 36-34 win.

"That was a lot of pressure on a kid who didn't have a lot of experience, but he really came through," lauded Sweeney. "He wrestled a good, smart match."

And Hickey wasn't done there.

Swimmers lose numbers game

Small roster only thing doing in talented Scituate-Cohasset squad

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Last week, the Scituate-Cohasset swim team had two meets that it could be proud of: individuals swam some of their best times of the season and relays finally started clicking. Unfortunately, both meets ended with the South Shore locals on the losing end.

"It's tough," noted second year coach Jamie Kearney. "We have a tiny team and we are going against some monster swimming schools, but the kids are really hanging in there."

Against Nauset last Wednesday, the Sci-Cohs came into the meet expecting to lose big. But Kearney, as well as the team members, emerged pleasantly surprised.

The reason for the pre-meet pessimism? Nauset had destroyed Duxbury earlier in the year, and Duxbury took first and second in every individual event against the Skipper-Sailors. Still, the Sci-Cohs held their own against the juggernaut Warriors, losing only 62-32, not a large margin for a four-lane meet.

Nauset took first and second place in only one event the entire day, the 200 freestyle. Scituate freshman Danielle Swain even recorded a first in the 100 breastroke, swimming a 1:20.71. She also too second in the 500 freestyle earlier in the day.

Cohasset junior David Ingber took two seconds in the 200 Individual medley and the 100 fly, while Scituate's Kathryn Noonan and Jen Kreutzberg and Cohasset senior captain Kelly Stone also took second.

On a day in which Nauset had nine different swimmers qualify for Sectionals, and four more qualify for states, the Sci-Cohs did a terrific job staying with one of the top swimming programs in Eastern Mass.

"Going to Nauset is like nothing else," stated Kearney. "You get off a two hour bus ride, everyone is exhausted, and you have to go against some outstanding swimmers. But my kids did everything they could. I am so proud of their performance."

On Friday, the Skipper-Sailors found themselves against a much more manageable opponent in Oliver Ames. With their sights on their third win of the season, the locals had their hopes dashed when only nine swimmers showed up to compete.

Sickness, car accidents and school absences all contributed to the Sci-Cohs dwarfed numbers. However, the nine who were there proved to the Tigers that they would have won at full strength. The final score: 87-77.

The Tigers won the first three events, jumping out to a sizable lead, primarilly because they were able to fill all three of their lanes, while the visitors could only enter one or two per event.

The Sci-Cohs proceeded to take the next five events, showing dominance in the sprints. Ingber won the 50 freestyle, and Scituate junior Amanda Turner pulled out a close one to take the 100 fly.

After a short break for diving, Ingber won the 100 freestyle, and Swain downed all three Tigers in winning the 500 free. The Skipper-Sailors then took their only lead of the day when the team of Bilton, Ingber, sophomore Marion Powers and Swain won the 200 freestyle relay.

The Tigers battled back though, getting a lead that would stick by winning the backstroke and breaststroke.

While the loss was disappointing, the Sci-Cohs finally got a chance to show their team's capabilities against schools of similar size.

"If we went against schools with the same number of students as us, our record would be a lot different. Instead, we have to go against Duxbury, Nauset, Sandwich. It just doesn't seem fair."

Fortunately, the Sci-Cohs are in the process of a league switch out of the Pilgrim Conference, so that next year they can go against more schools like Oliver Ames. For right now, though, they have to worry about the League Championships next week.

spent on Wednesday's game, coach Walsh didn't seem all that surprised or concerned over his team's "escape" win of 6-2 over a sub-par Rockland team (1-11) in non-league play Saturday.

Rockland goalie Dan Dunn came up with several huge saves through the first two periods, keeping it a 3-0 game heading into the final frame. This seemed to ignite his always physical teammates, who managed to slip two by Kinchla in the third — both times cutting the Skippers lead to two.

It was the Cohasset line that had hurt the Bulldogs all afternoon, though, that finally put the game away.

In fact, the trio of Carpenter, O'Connell and John Durkin had a hand in all six Skippers' goals. The first of the two backbreakers came just 34 seconds after Rockland star Mike Celestino had made it a 4-2 game.

Gaining control of the puck behind Rockland's net, Carpenter (goal, four assists) tried to bank in an impossible angle shot off the back of Dunn's leg (a frequent Cohasset trick), with the carom going instead to Durkin in front for a quick poke-in, good for his second goal of the game (to go along with two assists).

Less than two minutes later, O'Connell wrapped up his own five-point game (two goals, three assists), finishing off a beautiful rush from Cohasset's side of center ice by splitting a pair of Rockland defensemen at the blue line and beating Dunn high from 30 feet out.

This apple didn't fall far longtime Cohasset head coach Dennis Walsh. "You could see he had the skating, and stick handling, and shooting ability since his freshman year, but he's really become a much more complete player this year. His passing has really improved. He's seeing the whole ice now."

In the coach's opinion, however, none of these assets are his leading attribute.

"It's Greg's great attitude that really sets him apart," said Walsh. "No matter what you ask him to do or what line you put him on, he never complains. He's almost always one of the first kids on the ice for practice and he's definitely one of the hardest workers out there shift after shift."

The 35-point total is already six more than O'Connell put up all of last season as a sophomore when he led the Skippers in scoring.

Of course, the Skippers as a team are scoring a lot more than they did last year. With 103 tallies through 12 games, the team has already surpassed its total from the 2000-01 campaign. Best of all, the team has the record to show for it: 11-0-1.

Obviously, one of the reasons many outside of the Cohasset loop probably aren't quick to draw the connection between Mike and Greg O'Connell is the rarity with which we see children of celebrities attending public schools.

Clearly, it speaks to the unassuming character of the senior O'Connell that Greg is still at Cohasset High. It also speaks, though, to the loyalty of Greg to all of his friends with whom he grew up playing hockey and other sports—another case of the apple not falling far from the tree.

"It would be tough to leave the guys I've been playing with most of my life," said Greg, who is also a standout performer for the Cohasset High soccer team which has won games in the state tourney each of the past two years. "I'm really having a ball right now."

Of course, this is a decision he will have to face within the next few months. Coaches from St. Marks (of Southborough) and Belmont Hill have already made overtures to Greg, who knows his best chance of earning a scholarship would come via playing at an elite private school such as these.

"I know I'm going to have to make a decision pretty soon," conceded Greg. "I'll probably start thinking hard about everything this spring."

If he committed to a private or prep school after this school year, Greg would have to repeat his junior year. That being the case, he claims he is also considering the possibility of graduating from Cohasset High in the spring of 2003, and then attending a year of private school before college.

Greg indicates his mother and father (who played two years at Archbishop Williams in Braintree before making a surprising jump to the Ontario Hockey League to play Canadian major junior hockey) are leaving the decision pretty much to him

Despite his hectic schedule as G.M. with the NHL's fourth winningest team (at the moment), Mike still finds time to occasionally attend Greg's games. He is a more frequent visitor to practices, where there aren't nearly as many folks around anxious to share their opinion of the Jason Allison trade, or other weighty Bruins matters. He even laces them up from time-to-time to help Cohasset coach Dennis Walsh out.

"It's kind of neat having (his father) there," confided Greg, who has an older sister, Kristen, and younger brother, Matt, an eighth grader at Cohasset Middle School who is likewise a standout at soccer and hockey. "Although the other night (Sunday, in Mashpee) he was there and he heard some fan yell something about me being 'Mike O'Connell's kid.' Sometimes it's awkward."

There are also issues with teammates, though he notes those are generally kind of a kick.

"They always want to know what's going on with the Bruins," said Greg, with a laugh, "or wanting to know why they're slumping on trying to get the inside scoop on any trades."

As far as carrying forward with his lofty hockey aspirations, however, Greg makes it clear that he couldn't have done much better in the dad department.

"He's got such great insights and he really helps me out with pointers," said Greg.

"He also lets me know when I've had a bad game," he adds. "But that's OK. Sometimes I deserve to hear it."

COASTAL STARS

I had the good fortune to attend my son's practice the other night. Trying to find good fortune in being at a frigid rink in Quincy on a Wednesday night to watch a youth hockey practice would be a challenge for most.

However, it was my good fortune to be there because I don't get to see my son's team practice that often and I was able to witness an exhibition of sportsmanship and commitment that was the very embodiment of all that is good in youth sports.

There were two teams practicing. On one side of the ice was a team with just two victories. On the other side of the ice was a team with just two defeats. And yet from the view of the casual observer there was no way of telling which team was which from the way they were practicing. One would have expected that the team with all the wins buoyed by these many victories would be practicing intensely, maintaining an upbeat tempo. Alternatively one could have expected the team with two wins to be downbeat, lethargic, and simply going through the motions.

Instead what I found were two terrific practices that were high tempo, fun for the kids, with a focus on development and learning. It says a lot for a team and their coaches in the midst of a season that has not brought them much luck on the score sheet to show up and practice with such enthusiasm and dedication.

The team with the two wins is the Coastal stars Squirt C team coached by Jack Carrigg, Larry Evans, and Keith Moscow. Carrigg and his staff never let the standings effect how they practice and prepare. Their focus has been and continues to be developing players and keeping the game fun. They know with continued hard work they will get their share of victories.

Well a couple of games ago Carrigg's team notched an impressive victory against their arch rivals, the South Shore Seahawks. And sure enough it was an intense practice dedicated to battling for the puck as crafted by coach Evans that provided the impetus for the Stars to defeat the always tough Seahawks.

The game started with a scoreless first period. The Stars were anchored by a stalwart defensive corp. led by goalie Willie Lunberg. Lunberg who made a number of crucial saves was supported mightily by three solid defensive pairings. Kevin Daugherty and Grahm Schoenman were phenomenal in the eyes of coach Carrigg. The Cohasset tandem of Zach Moscow and Will Evans played unbelievably as they continually broke up Seahawk rushes and assisted forwards in bringing the puck up ice. Christian Terrio and Chris Riley played a solid defensive game and it was their effort to keep the puck in their zone that helped to create a number of offensive opportunities.

Early in the second, having secured the defensive side of the ice, the Stars began their offensive assault. The rugged Marshfield forward Mike Payne started things off by fighting through traffic and getting the puck to his reliable center Kevin O'Connell who roofed the puck by a talented Seahawk goaltender for the game's first goal.

The Stars second goal came midway through the second period as John Carrigg slid a pass to line mate Will Meech who then found a breaking Gordon Smith, who picked his spot and fired the puck home. Tic tack toe, Stars up by two at the end of two.

As the third period got underway it was steady Kevin O'Connell who gave the Stars a little more breathing room as he converted a beautiful pass from line mate and neighbor John Plante. O'Conell's aggressive two way play and his deftness with the puck earned him the game's MVP honors. With two unanswered goals late in the third the Seahawks made it a game.

However, the tenacious play of Geoff Evans, Connor Queenan, and Patrick McPartlin helped seal the deal for the Stars. Coach Carrigg marveled at the dogged play of the Evans, Queenan, and McPartlin line and considered a great back checking play by the always hustling Queenan as emblematic of the unyielding effort put forth by the entire team.

In the locker room after the game Coach Carrigg said it was nice to get a win but if it was all about wins and losses he would have hung it up a long time ago. Coach Carrigg interrupted the team's celebration with a sobering reminder to be ready for practice next week where they will continue to focus on skill development and teamwork.

SPORTS NOTES

Girls youth lacrosse sign-up extended

Registration for Cohasset's first-ever girls youth lacrosse programs will be extended through February 3. Girls in grade 5-8 are eligible to play for the Cohasset program, which will play in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Girls league.

The girls will be divided into two teams, with 7th and 8th graders playing on the 14-and-under squad, while 5th and 6th graders will play on the 12-and-under team. Because the program is new, it did not fill all available roster spots during its initial registration day. Registrations will be taken on a first-come, first-served basis until the rosters are filled.

The girls teams will practice twice each week and play on Sunday afternoons throughout the spring. Once the Cohasset Middle School girls lacrosse team opens its practices, the youth program will scale back the practice schedule for girls in grades 7 and 8.

Registration is $110. To receive forms or get more information, contact youth lacrosse coordinator Chuck Jaffe at 781-383-9858.

Registration for the boys' youth lacrosse program was closed on Jan. 5. All boys hoping to sign up for the spring season will be put on a waiting list in the hope that a roster spot will open up. Contact Jaffe at 781-383-9858 for forms and information.

Middle school gymnasts vault past Thayer

The CMS gymnasts won their first meet of the season against Thayer Academy with a score of 108.40 to 98.20.

On the vault Lisa Spirito took a first-place finish with a 7.80 followed by teammate and captain Kate Carpenter with a 7.70.

Swinging over the bars Lisa Spirito took first with a score of 6.80, second-place Kate Carpenter 6.30, followed by a third-place finish by Caitlin Sanchez with a 6.20.

Cohasset took all three places on the balance beam as well with Lisa Spirito taking in a first with a score of 7.7, second-place Kate Carpenter with a 7.10, followed by Caitlin Sanchez with a 6.60.

Cohasset's Kate Carpenter took second on floor and teammate and captain Allison Krupczak took third with a 7.0.

Teammate Kelsey Bell sat on the sidelines flashing scores due to an injury.

Katharine Murphy, Melissa Crawford, Sheelah Scott, Katie DeWaal, Nikki Dugan and Kate McBride are also a part of the middle school team for the 2001-'02 season.

The team is coached by Ruthann Ardizzoni, director of the gymnastics program at the SSCC. Assisting her are Carolyn Pratt and former Silver Lake star gymnast Lindsay Kay.

Prospects brighten for grapplers

The sophomore also clinched the win against Durfee with a pin, rendering moot the match at 145 with Chris McKenna. McKenna, who wrestled up at 154 to get a big win versus Whitman-Hanson, slapped on the pin on his Durfee counterpart for good measure to wrap things up at 43-29.

The match against Whitman-Hanson was the one that really had the team buzzing, though. This was just the third time the Skippers have topped the Panthers in their annual meetings since 1990.

"So many things went our way, and then when we thought we had it," said Sweeney. "But then Terry (Baroudi, in the 137 pound division) got upset by the Whitman-Hanson kid, and it all came down to Ian."

After McKenna's win at 154, Mike Casey (Matt's junior brother) bumped up from 173 to 191 to wrestle the Panthers standout and accomplished his objective of not getting pinned, thus awarding W-H just three points rather than six. This tact was taken because Sweeney felt Cosimo Cambi could bump up from 191 to pin W-H's 217 pound grappler, and the stratagem worked, as Cambi got the putdown and earned a big six points.

Also extremely noteworthy, according to Sweeney, was how tough Adrian Batson wrestled W-H's state title contender Nate Dineen at 173 pounds before being pinned.

John Hussey, weighing in at 205 pounds, bumped from his 217-pound division to heavyweight, and lost on a third period pin to a much larger W-H wrestler.

Freshmen Jonathan Littauer (Dan's little brother) at 105 pounds and Joe Kehoe at 114 earned big wins, as did junior Phil Strazzula at 127. Baroudi, a junior standout, was then shocked at 137, as he was twice caught in a scissors lock and lost on points.

"Terry was the better wrestler there, but he just got caught in a tough hold," asserted Sweeney. "It's just one of those things that happen sometimes in wrestling."

Of course, this set the stage for Hickey to wear the hero's crown.

Jonathan Littauer and Strazzula turned out to be the only triple winners on the day for the Skippers. Among the former's victories was a decision on points over a Wayland junior who finished third at sectionals last spring.

Baroudi rebounded, as expected, to take a couple of pins in his other two matches.

Hickey, McKenna and Kehoe were the only other double winners.

Wrestling Notes

This two-for-three performance, coupled with Wednesday's 49-27 league win over Norwell, gave the Skippers six wins in their last nine matches and raised their overall record on the season to 9-10.

"We've really come on steadily," raved Sweeney. "Hopefully, that's something we can continue to build on right through the end of the season and into sectionals."

Indeed, if the Skippers should have pulled off the win yesterday with Carver, their record in Pilgrim Conference competition would be 6-0, setting up a winner-take-all showdown against Rockland on Saturday at Middleboro High School.

"Rockland presents us with some huge challenges, but we saw (Saturday) that anything can happen," said Sweeney. "If our guys keep wrestling the way they have recently, and we work a break or two, I think it could be a real good match."

Sweeney gives much of the credit for his team's late-season push to his coaches. Peter Buckley has been his tireless and erstwhile assistant since 1988. The team has also been receiving help from Deke Conklin, the former Scituate High head coach and an assistant at Cohasset in 1999 and 2000, and Mr. Littauer.

Only half perfect

Kristin Sheerin went to a perfect 7-0 on the season, but her Norwell-Cohasset gymnastics team could not follow suit.

Four-tenths of a point is all that kept the Nor-Coh squad from keeping pace with its star performer, as visiting Marshfield took home the spoils from last Tuesday's showdown at the Cohasset Community Center, 126.1- 125.7.

Sheerin, a Cohasset High senior, took first in the vault (8.7), beam (8.8) and floor (9.1) to beat out Marshfield Julia Wilson for the all-around.

Wilson edged Sheerin in the bars with an 8.7 on her way to a second place finish in the all-around with a score of 33.3.

affirmed Ford. "We were behind by five, but we never let [the deficit] get to double digits."

Senior captain Pete Maitland scored all of his 12 points in the second half to lead a very balanced scoring attack. Sophomore Chris Bilodeau also threw in 12, while junior Ben Lynner had nine, and senior Matt Bilodeau tallied eight.

Falcons All-star Bill Bellatty did his best to keep his team in it, with a game-high 23 points. He even rattled off four consecutive three-pointers late in the game to keep his team's hopes alive. With little support from his teammates, however, the Skippers were able to salt things away by making their free throws down the stretch.

Mashpee center Tom Dickenson, also a Patriot League All-star from last year, torched Cohasset in their earlier game this year on Dec. 20. He had been kicked off the team for disciplinary reasons, leaving Mashpee without a presence inside, and Bellatty with very limited passing options.

Against Norwell, Cohasset just became another name on the list of schools Norwell has been destroying this year, with the Clippers recording an 84-55 win.

"They are awesome," concluded Ford of the remarkably talented squad. "They are one of the best shooting teams around.

"No matter how hard we played, they could match it," added Cohasset junior Ian Kidder. "They proved that they are a top team."

As is usually the case with Norwell games, junior Gerry Corcoran stole the show, lighting up a career high 42 points. His combination of sweet outside shooting and uncanny ability to post-up smaller guards led the way for a team that collectively shot over sixty percent from the floor.

"(Corcoran) is the best player in our league," said Ford of the player who had been criticized for only being a scoring threat. "He has definitely improved his complete game. You can't stop him."

With their record standing at 5-9 on Friday night, many counted the Skippers a lost cause for the playoffs. But at 6-9 now, they still have an outside chance. They need to steal their next match-up with Abington, then come away with the winnable home games against Norton and Hull, and one more non-league Div. 4 opponent.

Boys hoop Spirit Night

The Cohasset High athletic boosters have scheduled a Spirit Night for tomorrow night's boys basketball game against South Shore League rival Norton.

Any Cohasset student wearing a Cohasset Recreation T-shirt and accompanied by a paying adult will receive free admission.

The junior varsity game is scheduled to begin at 5:00 p.m., with the varsity tip-off slated for 6:30.

Follow the rules when dropping off or picking up children

SCHOOLS IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Cohasset schools have been so busy and active over the last few months. The construction is moving along very well and the changes are amazing at both the Deer Hill and the Middle/High School. The weather has been rather bizarre but I have a feeling that all those involved in the construction are rather happy with the mild days. Now that we have past the holiday period, I will be getting back on track with the Schools In page. For the February page, please have all information, pictures and event news to me no later than Feb. 22 by noon. This information can come from administrators, staff, parents or even children. We all love to hear, read and see photos of some of the wonderful events and happenings in and around our schools.

Please remember at all three schools that their are definite drop-off, pick up and parking rules in effect. These are put into place for the safety of our children, the smooth and timely manner in which cars and buses can be moved in and out and for adequate parking for all. Nothing makes any one person or car more important than the one in front of or behind it and certainly, none of us are more important than the safety of our children! If you choose to drive to any of the schools, follow all the rules! The Cohasset police have definitely been making their presence known in random spot checks and I know that none of us want to risk an issue with them because we have chosen to not follow the rules. Really, it is a very simple request.

OSGOOD

The Joseph Osgood School has been very busy with so many wonderful projects, activities and events. Just recently, Mr. Kevin Dykas and his students in kindergarten, second and third grades were able to share with parents, relatives and friends the amazing art of Taebo. It was so fun for us as parents to see what the kids have been talking about(and instructing us) in this fascinating and healthy activity. Thank you Mr. Dykas for keeping our kids active and motivated while in gym class.

Another recent program at the school was from the PSO Curriculum Enrichment Committee. Kim Canney and Mary Kate McKenna arranged to have noted author/illustrators Betsy and Giulio Maestro to the Osgood School. This wonderful program was enjoyed by all and Mr. Michael Astley has submitted a story for you to read and enjoy about this program.

All families of the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools are being asked to not park, pick up or drop off children behind the Osgood School on Old Pasture Road. The Cohasset police will ticket anyone taking part in this. Believe it or not, numerous complaints have been filed with the police of people dropping off and picking up children right under the sign that says, "No Dropping Off or Picking Up Children!"

Kindergarten Registration for the 2002-2003 school year is in progress. This ongoing process takes place in the Osgood School office and you will need to bring a copy of your child's birth certificate with you. If you have any questions, call 781-383-6117.

Report Cards will be distributed on Tuesday, Feb. 5 for all Osgood students. Parent/teacher conferences will be scheduled during early release days on Feb. 7 & 14. Make sure to mark these dates on your calendars and if you have not been contacted for a conference, please call your room mother(s) for a date and time.

The next scheduled PSO meeting for the Osgood School is on Feb. 5 at 7:30 p.m. This is a wonderful way for all parents to voice their questions, comments or concerns and to hear what is happening in the school. Mothers and/or fathers, please think about attending a meeting and seeing what the PSO is all about. It is definitely a way for you to stay completely connected to all the happenings within the schools.

The Cohasset PAC (Parents Advisory Council) was recently able to purchase a language package in memory of Barbara McCabe, a special needs teacher who passed away last spring. The Comprehensive Test of Phonological Processing assesses phonological awareness, phonological memory and rapid naming. A deficit in one or more of these kinds of phonological processing abilities is viewed as the most common cause of learning disabilities in general and of reading disabilities in particular. In addition, phonological processing abilities also support effective mathematical calculation, listening comprehension and reading comprehension. The CTOPP was developed to aid in the identification of students who may profit from instructional activities to enhance their phonological skills. The Special Education Department was asked to select a program that service providers felt would benefit the school-age children who worked with Barbara McCabe and her skills. This is just a fantastic program that definitely showed parents giving back in the name of a wonderful and special teacher.

Their is a PAC presentation open to all on Feb. 6 in the Osgood Music Room from 7-9 p.m. Dr. Jerome Shultz, from the Learning Lab at Lesley College will provide this workshop on "Communication and Stress between School and Home."

DEER HILL

Students and Staff at the Deer Hill School have also been hard at work. Every week brings the news of another successful theme, project, field trip or event in all the grades and the children show a great deal of enthusiasm with it all. As stated in the Osgood section, Thursday, Feb 7 and Thursday, Feb. 14 are early release days. If you would like to schedule a conference with any of the staff at the Deer Hill, please make an appointment with that staff person. It is not advisable to try and catch them in the morning before school as they are getting ready for the day ahead or may already have a scheduled conference. Please send a note or call the office at 781-383-6115 to work on an agreeable time for all.

A helpful reminder was recently sent out for all parents of Deer Hill students about the money being sent in for lunch. Please remind your children that money sent to school for lunch should be used for just that. If you have given them a small amount for a snack, please make sure that they know to eat lunch first. A lunch ticket can be purchased for $22.50 and can only be used for lunches, not snacks.

A Grade 6 Family Fun Night is scheduled for Friday, Feb. 8 from 6:30-8:30 p.m. The children took a vote and the pizza/karaoke party was the hands down winner. This is a whole family event and all children need to be accompanied by an adult. If anyone has a karaoke machine that could be borrowed for the evening, please call Diane Shipp at 781-383-9198.

Looking for a great way for your children to send a heartfelt and meaningful note of thanks, invitation or message to someone? KIDSART is coming to the Deer Hill School in February and it is the answer to the question. Children's designs find special places in the hearts of families and friends. Each student will have an opportunity in art class to design his/her own personalized note cards. These make great thank you notes, birthday cards or invitations, announcements, Mothers Day cards or gifts and more! Deer Hill students will create these works of art in their scheduled art class and bringing the copies of their design home for you as parents to look at and place your orders. A special day will be set aside at the Deer Hill School for families of children of all ages to come and design your own special design. Please read next week's Around Town for the day and time. If you have any questions, call Karen Hurd at 781-383-1827, Karen Oronte at 781-383-6737 or Jen Piepenbrink at 781-383-0143.

The Deer Hill PSO Web site is now up and running! This site has been a work in progress and due to the hard work of Jackie Fitts, it is finally a reality. Make sure to check it out at www.cohassetpso.org. Also being added to the site this month is the exciting release of a Classified Section open to anyone in town! The Classifieds will be a place for you to offer too-small clothing, sports equipment, furniture and more. All of those yard sale items can now be placed right on this site. So start some early spring cleaning, box up those clothes and sports equipment, clean off that furniture that needs a new home and get ready to go shopping on the Classifieds! Questions, comments and new ideas? Call Jen Piepenbrink at 781-383-0143 or Susan Galligan at 781-383-0765.

The MCAS Test Schedule for the Deer Hill School is: English Language Arts Composition for Grade 4, April 9, with a makeup date of May 9. All other content areas for Grades 4, 5 and 6 will be May 13-26.. Students who miss tests and makeup tests will receive a grade of "zero." Students who miss tests and make-ups due to illness must provide a note(which must be returned with testing materials) from a physician.

CMHS

Although I don't have much news to report from the Middle/High School, the students have been very busy indeed. I have two items to mention. The gift of giving is still going strong and families of students in the Middle/High School are all asked to donate $5 to the Cohasset Middle/High School book drive. This program is being continued through the end of February and the response has been wonderful. If there are families or students who would like to donate towards a specific book, please contact the people included in this message. A special bookplate will be affixed acknowledging your generous contribution. Please make all checks payable to: Cohasset Middle High School book drive and mail them to 143 Pond Street, Cohasset MA 02025, attn: CHMS/PSO.

If you have any questions, please call Helen Daley, 383-2978, Bernadette Faulkner, 383-6918, Karen Oronte, 383-6737, Sally Fletcher, 383-2344, Nancy Hertig, 383-3214 or Caren Wheelwright at 383-9019. You can also email them at CMHSPSO@hotmail.com This is a much-needed program that really helps at all levels of learning. Art books and resources are also needed and donations can be directed to them as well. Thank you for all your support.

Book makers share their story at Osgood

By Michael Scott Astley
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Watch. As a child picks up a new book, wonder fills eager eyes. The expectation of an opportunity to absorb the tapestry of new ideas and original thoughts captivates. However, this curious magic is, in fact, the culmination of an often tedious and lengthy process firmly rooted within concrete reality.

The reality-based process combines a long series of many distinct steps. Recently, these various steps came to life before the very eyes of Osgood students during a special visit from Betsy and Guilio Maestro. This interesting couple is an accomplished and prolific author and illustrator team. Although their goal is to create exciting and gripping products, the working process is both intensive and laborious. But, it is ultimately a rewarding labor of love.

As inquisitive students fill the Osgood library, the Maestros prepare to deliver a glimpse into their world of research and specialized craft. The creative team proceeds to offer an inspiring demonstrative talk about the process of creating non-fiction children's books.

As inquisitive students fill the Osgood library, the Maestros prepare to deliver a glimpse into their world of research and specialized craft.

Surrounded by many of their published works, the Maestros lay groundwork for the initial conception of a book project. Betsy Maestro explains that developing the subject of a proposed book is merely the beginning of many weeks and even years of work. The subject development phase expands into a major research effort involving the collection of historical detail, visual cues, and related topic information.

Once the subject has been developed through research, however, Betsy Maestro's work is just beginning. Mrs. Maestro must now plan her text. She must take all of the research notes and organize them in such a manner as to present a concise and interesting story. This might involve many consecutive writing drafts. Once she has completed a successful copy that satisfies her careful scrutiny, Mrs. Maestro will send the manuscript off to the publisher in New York.

At the publishing house, Betsy Maestro's manuscript will be read by her editor. The job of the editor is to read the manuscript very critically. The editor looks for all types of errors and even makes creative suggestions and changes. When the manuscript arrives back from the editor, Betsy Maestro will have lots and lots of post-it notes to read. It will take several more weeks to make all of the suggested corrections.

The editorial part of the written process will be repeated again, and sometimes again. Once the written manuscript is finalized, the words which Betsy Maestro has written will be passed to Guilio Maestro, the illustrator. His job is to take those words and design pictures to enhance them. His process will begin with the same type of research material that his wife gathered.

Because the Maestros create non-fiction books, their research must provide them with accurate pieces of information to help them convey actual events in real circumstances. After completing the research for his pictures, Guilio Maestro will create a storyboard with thumbnail drawings for each image to be included. He must then create a working dummy of drawings in book form. There are several different possible formats for presenting these initial sketches. Mr. Maestro will create several more incarnations of the illustrations in progress before making semi-finished artwork to send to his editor in New York.

After several weeks, his art will be returned covered with many notes, just as the writing was. After carefully recreating his illustrations to accommodate the alterations, Guilio Maestro will return new artwork to his editor. This editorial process will continue until both the editor and Mr. Maestro are satisfied with the pictures.

Once all of these steps have been completed, the written words and the drawn illustrations are ready to be combined into the finished book. Large sheets of paper will be printed with many pages appearing on each side. These sheets will be folded and trimmed in such a way that they will form the correct pages of the book. Once this set of pages is stapled, it can be inserted into either a hard or soft binding. After the pages are bound into the cover, the completed book will be ready for distribution to booksellers anywhere.

In the end, when the new book is picked up by a passing child and eager eyes twinkle, the long and exhausting process will be well rewarded. Betsy and Guilio Maestro have created more than 90 books together. Some of the titles include: "The Discovery of the Americas," "The Story of Money," "Snow Day," "How do Apples Grow," and "A Sea Full of Sharks." Their books have been translated into a number of foreign languages.

Summer Institute courses offered

Course: Harbor Research Projects
Grades 7 - 12 (1.25 credits)
On-going throughout the summer
Cost: $75 materials / lab fee* (tuition fee may be waived if pending grant applications are funded.)
Description:
In the summer of 2001, MIT's Sea Grant College Program awarded Cohasset High School Summer Institute teachers with a $10,000 grant to assist the Cohasset Board of Health in addressing the town's concerns about water quality in Little Harbor and Cohasset Harbor. Research conducted over the last year will be continued this summer. In addition, a new project in the Gulf River will be initiated.

Students electing to join any one of these research projects will conduct and analyze chemical, physical, and biological assessments of these water bodies. Student teams will be headed by paid senior interns and led by Miss McGrail, Dr. Thomae, or Mr. Buckley. (This project runs throughout the summer; specific meeting days and times are decided upon by the teacher and participants. 54 hours class and field work is necessary to be eligible for course credit.)

Course: National Park Field Study
Grades 9 - 12 (1.25 credits)
Mid July (specific dates, TBA)
Course fee: approx. $1200 per person
Class size limited to 12 students
Description:
National Park Field Study is a 10-day, intensive, on-site study and exploration of a national park. This year's field study class will travel to Canada to explore Nova Scotia and New Brunswick National Parks. Through the experiences of low impact camping and recreation (hiking, kayaking, climbing, and horseback riding are some examples) students will study park ecology, natural history, and human impact on the environment. In addition to the on-site days, students are required to prepare for and attend at least three evening classes (2 pre and 1 post). Students participating in this class must be accustomed to moderately strenuous physical activity. (Ms. McGrail)
Visit http://parkscanada.pch.gc.ca/parks/main_e.htm

Course: Maritime Studies and the Schooner Ernestina
Grades 7 - 12 (1.25 credits)
Aug 12- Aug 16
Cost: $575 per person
Description:
The class immerses students into life at sea as marine researchers, oceanographers, navigators, historians, deck hands, and galley stewards. The four day, three night sail aboard the historic Schooner Ernestina is an experience that students remember for the rest of their lives. This year's voyage departs from and returns to the port of Boston, allowing students to imagine themselves in the roles of mariners from centuries past, moving in and out of historic Boston. Students are required to participate in five pre-voyage meetings. These meetings prepare students to meet the academic requirements of the course. They also provide an opportunity for students to learn to work together on the water, the most crucial challenge that students must meet in order to make the voyage a rewarding experience for all. (Mr. Buckley)
Visit the Ernestina's website at http://www.ernestina.org

Course: Messing about the North River
Grades: 7-8 (1.25 credits
Dates: June 24-28 (Tentative)
Cost: $250; enrollment limited to 11 students
Description:
Did you know that the North River is the only scenic protected river in the state of Massachusetts? Or, that the upper sections of the river include one of the largest tidal freshwater marshes in the state? The North River is an incredible natural resource with a wealth of ecosystems and history to explore. Come along and we'll investigate and explore the North River watershed through a week of hands-on field trips. The class will culminate in an overnight trip! (Mr. Jones / Mr. Erlandsen)

Stairway to 'Havens'

Scituate photographer now showing at conservatory gallery

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

With the body of work before you, I hope to share with you some of the goodness that exists in the world today. The goodness in people. The goodness in places. The goodness in things. Havens."

The closing word of this artist statement by Scituate photographer Tim Ryan is also the title of his long-term project and photo exhibition. "Havens," which Ryan characterizes as a work in progress, is currently on display in the Staircase Gallery at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham through the end of February.

Ryan's concept of "Havens" underscores his show's theme of havens, or refuges, from the variety of uncertain or unsettling aspects of modern life. These include not only the fear or anxiety that might result from strife and disorder as viewed on the daily news but also the relentless rush toward "progress" — business, industrial, and cultural —affecting change for better or worse. Because Ryan began the back in 1997, he stressed that its motif is certainly not just in regard to the international climate since September 11, as timely as it might seem in light of recent events.

"There isn't any strong September 11 angle to this show," said Ryan. "I wouldn't really feel right capitalizing on or referring to that tragedy. The reason I started this body of work in 1997 was simply because I wanted my documentary photography to show some of the goodness that exists in the world and not focus on the bad or the strife. To me, the name 'Havens' represents any person, place or thing that provides safety or sanctuary. So it can be sanctuary from too much change in society, or from the challenges of inner city schools, or inner city life in general, for that matter."

Scituate photographer Tim Ryan stands with some of his work on display through the end of February at the South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery.

The portraits of Scituate attempt to convey what Ryan sees as the town's sanctuary appeal to fishermen and sailors as well as residents and visitors.

Ryan's words might suggest that although his work's theme is of safety and sanctuary, it's not necessarily all rosy. "Havens" is presented in three distinct portions, including segments of photos shot in 1997 at Willauer Middle School, the nationally-known, Outward Bound school located on Thompson Island in Boston Harbor; shots of various travelling summer carnivals around Massachusetts taken in '98; and images and portraits of mostly beach and ocean scenes taken around Scituate in 2001.

Sanctuary is best illustrated by the Willauer School collection. First, these scenes, showing middle school students in various activities in the school's classrooms, science lab, gymnasium and the end-of-day ferry ride back to Boston, are shot in stark black-and-white, as opposed to the standard color of the rest of the show's photos. Among the most impressive are the angled, through-the-window-panes scenery shot on Thompson Island of "Winter Walk" and the blurry, stop-action figures of two inner-city teenagers named Micheal and Jason playing basketball in the gym of the aptly titled "Joy." Altogether, the images capture what Ryan describes as the different qualities of life on the Island — the hard work, the camaraderie, the optimism, and ultimately, the safety.

The carnival-shot collection is gathered from scenes at recreation parks in Wakefield, North Andover and Dedham of three summers ago. All of the typical images —carousel horses, bright red candy apples, Ferris Wheels — are included and caught in friendly, folksy style, which, Ryan would say, is precisely the point. "I'm most impressed by how carnivals still look the same and have the same appeal now, in this age of the Internet and PlayStation, as they did thirty years ago," Ryan said.

The portraits of Scituate attempt to convey what Ryan sees as the town's sanctuary appeal to fishermen and sailors as well as residents and visitors. Some standouts here include "Lighthouse with Rocks," with the photographer's emphasis on the warm, amber light reflected off the rocks at the foot of Scituate Light, and "Porch and Blue Sky," where the homey quality of the hedge-lined beachside house plays artfully off the blue ocean background.

Ryan, a graduate of Boston's New England School of Photography, worked in the financial business before switching to his current career. He also shoots portraits of weddings, families and high school seniors in addition to his artistic work.

Tim Ryan will show his work through the end of February at The South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery. For more information on the exhibit call (781) 749-7565 ext. 16

The HSO drums up interest in percussion at last year's Discovery Concert.

A twist of the tale

Wolf has his day in court in HSO Discovery Concert

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

For those that have wondered what would happen to the wolf after his unfortunate encounter with Peter, the Hingham Symphony Orchestra will answer that question with performances this weekend of "Peter vs. The Wolf," a courtroom comedy based on the classic Prokofiev symphonic fairy tale.

Both children and adults will love this blend of music, story and comedy, says Nina Wellford, managing director of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra.

"It's very funny and entertaining for children and their parents. It also does a lot toward teaching children about each of the instruments that makes up the symphony. And of course, there's lots of beautiful music as well," she said.

Written By Justin Locke, a Boston-based writer, media producer and former member of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra, the story picks up where the classic tale of Peter and the Wolf ends.

The Wolf gets his day in court, defending himself against the charges brought against him and calling each of the orchestra instruments to the stand in order to "cross-examine" them.

This program, which has been delighting family audiences around the world for 15 years, will be performed in New England for the first time in several years.

"This program is unusual in a number of ways," said Locke. "First of all, the bad guy is the star, and unlike most children's programming, the bad guy does most of the teaching. And it is very unusual to have musicians as actors — I still get questions from presenters asking if that will work. But experience has shown that musicians love to ham it up whenever possible," said Locke.

In addition to the comedic aspects of the program, the classic music of Peter and the Wolf will be included, as well as narration from Kaleigh of the PBS kids' show ZOOM, and the regional actors Sarah DeLima, Douglas Trudeau and Jeremy Harrington.

The 65-member Hingham Symphony Orchestra known for most of its 50 years as the Hingham Civic Orchestra and called the HSO since 1997, is really beginning to hit its stride and build a reputation, Wellford said.

After hiring conductor Jin Kim in 1997, the HSO placed a greater emphasis

Big Brother is back

60s rockers make tour stop at Company Theatre

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Rock fans and historians remember Big Brother & the Holding Company as one of the flagship bands of San Francisco's late 1960s psychedelic scene, along with the Grateful Dead, Jefferson Airplane and Quicksilver Messenger Service.

Some also recall Big Brother as Janis Joplin's original band, which she ultimately outgrew and left behind on her way to a legendary and finally tragic solo career. That point may be arguable, but as singer/guitarist and surviving BBHC member Sam Andrew is here to tell, there was and indeed has continued to be life for the semi-famed, Bay Area band both before and after Janis.

Andrew and other original bandmates Peter Albin (vocals, bass), James Gurley (guitar) and Dave Getz (drums) have reunited frequently in the last decade-and-a-half as BBHC for recording and touring dates, when not busy with various musical projects on their own. Currently, the trio of Andrew, Albin and Getz is together once again, and with more recent recruits Lisa Mills (vocals) and Tom Finch (guitar), is playing a series of Northeast winter dates featuring both Big Brother classics and newer material. The group makes a local stop when the band appears in concert at Norwell's Company Theatre on Saturday (Feb. 2) at 8 p.m.

"We've never really gone away for too long," said Andrew. "All of us in Big Brother have been playing around the Bay Area or touring internationally, either in reunions or with other band projects or sitting in with other bands and musicians for club gigs and what-have-you. We've always had various and wide-ranging musical influences for one thing, everything from blues and traditional and progressive jazz to classical and world music, and have pursued those interests with bands both onstage and in the studio. I had a jazz-rock quartet in San Francisco in which I played sax from 1985 to '95. We've all had an experimental bent with our music which I think was evident right from our earliest Big Brother records."

"This current version of Big Brother is one that we're really excited about, Peter (Albin), Dave (Getz) and I. We have a new vocalist, Lisa (Mills), who does sort of step into the Janis (Joplin) role with the band, but coming from Alabama, has a different sort of Southern, soulful style of singing than

Fettuccini Alfredo

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

This classic dish began life in Italy as a simple combination of triple crème and Parmesan tossed with fresh fettuccini. Once it was imported into this country, American chefs began adding an egg yolk as well, perhaps to make up for the lackluster state of American cream. (History books suggest that Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford brought it back from their Roman honeymoon but this version sounds apocryphal – I am sure that plenty of Italian immigrants were serving it on these shores long before Hollywood discovered it.) In any case, bad Fettuccini Alfredo abounds – gloppy, heavy, and indigestible. This is no spa supper but the combination should be rich without being dull and burdensome.

More research into current variations on this recipe turned up other ingredients including chicken stock and butter but I started with a simple recipe of 1 cup heavy cream, 1 egg yolk, Parmesan cheese, and salt and pepper married to one pound of fettuccini. I simmered the heavy cream until it coated a spoon, whisked in the egg yolk, and then added 1/3 cup Parmesan cheese and 1/4 teaspoon salt. I added the cooked pasta and briefly cooked the sauce and pasta together. It was surprisingly good for so little effort but I wanted to test other ingredients as well.

My first discovery was that I preferred this sauce with a bit (three tablespoons) of unsalted butter added along with the heavy cream. Chicken stock fared less well, however, since the flavor was unexpected and it diluted the flavor of the cream. One whole egg instead of just a yolk reduced the color and flavor of the sauce and two yolks made the dish too eggy. I also tried omitting the egg altogether but the sauce was flat tasting. As far as how to add the one egg yolk, I found it best to whisk it into the thickened butter/cream mixture and then simmer it for about a minute or until the sauce is very smooth, glossy, and slightly thicker.

Too much cooking at this point results in scrambled eggs. The best way to manage the timing of this process is to prepare the cream and butter and hold it until the pasta is almost ready. Now whisk in the yolk and add the drained pasta to the skillet as soon as possible. For the cheese, the 1/3 cup of Parmesan I started with was just right – it added flavor without overpowering the other delicate ingredients.

Traditionally, this dish is served with fresh egg pasta cut into fettuccine. (Fresh pasta absorbs a cream sauce better than dried; extruded pastas shapes tend to trap too much sauce in each bite, making the combination a bit too rich for most folks.) This is why I preferred using store-bought fresh pasta to dry pasta since it does absorb the sauce better.

To finish, I seasoned each portion with a healthy dose of freshly ground black pepper. I was also happy to grate a hint of nutmeg over each portion. Fresh herbs tasted out of place in this dish unless I was using the sauce to dress something besides fettuccini. (Se variation below.)

FETTUCCINE ALFREDO IN 10 MINUTES

This dish was invented by Alfredo di Lelio as a restorative for his wife after she gave birth. Who else but the Italians or French would consider cream and cheese a restorative?

3 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 cup heavy cream
1 1/2 teaspoons table salt for the pasta plus 1/4 teaspoon for the sauce
1 pound fettuccini, fresh preferred
1 large egg yolk
1/3 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese plus additional cheese for serving
Freshly ground black pepper
Freshly grated nutmeg (optional)

1. Place a large pot of water to boil over high heat. Place the butter and cream in a skillet large enough to hold the sauce and cooked pasta over medium heat and bring to a simmer and then cook until thickened enough to heavily coat the back of a spoon. (At this point you may turn off the heat and hold the cream mixture to wait for the pasta if necessary.)

2. When the water is boiling, add the 1 1/2 teaspoons salt and pasta and cook to within 2 minutes of package directions. Place the cream over low heat (or lower the heat if the cream has been continually cooking) and whisk in the egg yolk. Once incorporated gently simmer until the sauce is thick, smooth and shiny, about 1 minute. Add the Parmesan and 1/4 teaspoon salt and whisk to combine until smooth, about 30 seconds. Taste for seasoning and add additional salt if necessary. Drain pasta (it should be toothsome, not flabby), add to skillet, and toss to combine. Serve immediately with additional freshly grated Parmesan cheese, freshly ground black pepper and a grating of fresh nutmeg if desired.

on professionalism and building a strong core of musicians, according to Wellford, who said that every year, the HSO gets better and better.

"We're known as one of the best regional orchestras around," said Wellford. "Many of the musicians who leave the HSO go on to large, well-known orchestras. We've had some of the best," she said. Some former HSO musicians have gone on to play for the Paris Opera, the Israeli Symphony and the Chicago Symphony, to name a few.

Wellford said the HSO is more than just a performing orchestra — they also consider themselves a teaching orchestra.

"We give our members a lot of exposure and plenty of opportunities to play. They work hard, but the reward is that they come out of a season a better musician," she said.

The orchestra is made up mostly of students of music from area colleges and universities. The orchestra also has eight volunteer spaces, very highly coveted and sought after by area residents who are expert musicians.

Those spots have gone in the past to music teachers, recent music school graduates, or even the lay person who has kept up with their art over the years.

"Volunteers are very appreciative of the time they get to play with the HSO, the coaching they receive, and the opportunity to play with a full orchestra," said Wellford

Welland said the HSO draws listeners from all over the South Shore.

"Our audience is made up of people who love orchestra music. We're another layer for people who love the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We don't claim to be the BSO, but our audience is growing in leaps and bounds," she said. Wellford said she has even had people tell her they're giving up their BSO subscription in exchange for a HSO series.

"It's quite a compliment," she said.

The HSO's $220,000 budget is funded mainly through state grants, individual donors, businesses and foundations, including the Wilder Foundation of Hingham, one of the HSO's largest contributors. Wellford said this year's Discovery Concerts are dedicated to the Wilder Foundation.

The HSO has several performances each year from October through May, including Summer Pops performances, a chamber series and their Discovery Concerts. This weekend's performances will be held at 3 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 2 and 3 at Weymouth High School. The high school is located at 360 Pleasant Street. An instrument showcase follows the program. Tickets are $15 for adults, $10 for youths ages 5 to 18 and $5 for children under 5. For more information, call 781-740-5694.

Big Brother is back

Janis, who was from Texas. And there's our current guitarist, Tom (Finch), who has heard Eddie Van Halen and the other heavy metal players and all the guitar gymnastics, and brings those more contemporary influences to our sound. It's like the real mother's milk with those young muscles brought in to help out and bring us up to date," Andrew said.

Guitarist Finch appeared with Big Brother on the band's first all-new studio album in many years, Do What You Love, released on an independent label in 1998. Along with BBHC's four original albums released on Columbia Records during Janis' late-60s stay, including the infamous 1968 semi-live set Cheap Thrills, the last decade or so has seen a slew of first-time disc releases capturing the legendary psych-jamming club and ballroom shows of the original band's heyday - even one called Cheaper Thrills - plus another reunion outing under the name Big Brother and the Holding Company and Friends released in the mid 90s.

Despite BBHC's success in carrying on in recent years, Andrew always remembers how central Joplin was as dynamic frontperson of the classic-era band. Recalling his close personal and professional relationship with the late singer, Andrew said he essentially thinks about his friend and former bandmate every day. The guitarist offers this memory of Janis on his band website at www.bbhc.com.

"Her voice was high and edgy like the scratching of an old Victrola spinning out a Bessie Smith tune. She seemed to be on fast forward, with very quick reflexes. She understood the blues tradition intellectually and she had absorbed the blues feeling by osmosis growing up in Texas. Janis had a very authentic sound to her voice that was naturally there."

Many of the classic songs delivered by that voice, including "Piece of My Heart," "Summertime," "Me and Bobby McGee" and others, will be heard in Saturday's show.

Witness the wonders of the winter garden

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Part 2

The spellbinding beauty of a winter wonderland quickly melted before our eyes this past week as mild temperatures and balmy breezes kindled spring fever throughout our region. The crystalline blanket of snow that covered our gardens only a week before became a distant memory as the warmth of the afternoon sun created an irresistible urge to stroll through the garden searching for signs of springtime.

During the latter half of each January, Mother Nature customarily teases us with a momentary glimpse of spring. The January thaw, which tends to follow a period of frigid weather, offers hope and promise to gardeners who yearn for the rebirth of their landscapes all winter long. Despite a remarkably mild winter thus far, this annual warming trend gives our spirits a boost as gardeners everywhere begin to envision their gardens in bloom once again. Wintry weather is likely to return, but the realization that spring will eventually appear in all its grandeur makes these temporary relapses bearable.

As I observed my own plantings during this past week of weather contrasts, I took a number of photographs to document my own landscape as it appeared in the dead of winter. Each spring, we can enjoy nature's beauty with the greening of the landscape and the flowering of native trees and plants. Gardeners further enhance this kaleidoscope by adding trees, shrubs and flowers to their gardens to provide glorious color from spring through fall. The winter landscape, however, tends to be forgotten when planning the overall design and yet, this is the time when we most need color.

The garden in January need not be a bare, lifeless, desolate patch of brown earth. After many years of planting, this realization led me to begin the search for small trees and shrubs to incorporate into the perennial border that provided multiple seasons of interest. Perennials that demonstrated evergreen foliage or attractive seedpods during the winter season likewise became a high priority. Groupings of these plants offer patches of texture and color that are a welcome sight during the dormant winter months.

Although most homeowners recognize the value of evergreen trees and shrubs as an integral part of their foundation plantings, we often neglect this feature when designing our gardens. Plantings of different colored evergreens including varied tones of green, blue, yellow and copper enhance every landscape. The ability to blend, contrast and repeat textures, using smooth, shiny foliages with the coarser textures of needled evergreens further strengthens the overall design.

Prior to the melting of the snow, I noted several evergreen shrubs that were particularly captivating against the sparkling white background. Along my back walkway, the attractive, variegated foliage of Daphne 'Carol Mackie' lingers during this moderate winter season. This small, handsome, semi-evergreen shrub will offer the additional reward of remarkably fragrant, pink and white flower clusters in late spring. Set against the backdrop of a stately, deep green, 'Fernspray' Chamaecyparis and the pristine snow cover, the effect was particularly eye-catching.

Beneath the pendulous branches of a magnificent weeping Katsura tree, the dramatic foliage of Euonymus 'Moonshadow' glowed in the slanted rays of the afternoon sunlight above the blanket of glimmering snow. The stunning yellow leaves bordered in deep green make a bold statement in all seasons. Its cousins, E. 'Emerald Gaiety' and E. 'Emerald and Gold' become tinged with mauve pink tones during the winter months providing an attractive complement to the bronze-colored leaves of PJM Rhododendron and the red, arching branches and glossy, burgundy-tinted leaves of Leucothoe.

Equally striking in color contrast, the stiff, pointed leaves of Yucca 'Golden Sword' provide a sensational focal point in the dormant landscape. The erect, yellow and green rosette is set against a deep green background hedge of a particularly hardy boxwood, Buxus 'Vardar Valley', which has yet to show evidence of winterburn in the many years that it has accented my front walkway. A fabulous clump of maiden grass, Miscanthus 'Morning Light', completes the small planting that greets visitors at the base of my walkway and contributes color, sound, texture and motion in all seasons.

A longtime, personal favorite, the brilliant red twigs of the variegated red-twigged dogwood, Cornus alba 'Elegantissima', are electrifying during the dormant winter months against an evergreen background, a blanket of snow, a white fence or in a foundation planting. The glorious, green and white leaves brighten a lightly shaded corner during the growing season or this adaptable shrub can serve as a focal point in a moisture-retentive sunny locale. Equally pleasing are the bright golden branches of the variegated, yellow-twigged dogwood. As the branches of these vigorous shrubs mature, the older bark tends to lose its vibrancy and a major renewal pruning in early spring is recommended to rejuvenate and promote new growth that will demonstrate the fabulous winter color in late autumn.

As the shadows lengthened and the temperatures dropped, I paused to take one last photo of the brilliant red fruits still clinging to the thorny branches of the barberries, Berberis 'Rosy Glow'. Although barberries have been targeted as one of our invasive species, I still consider them to be worthy additions to the landscape for the handsome burgundy foliage offered by many cultivars during the growing season and their colorful berries that persist through the winter months. Take time to enjoy the sights, sounds and beauty of the winter landscape.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30

The moon enters Virgo at 3:40 a.m., remaining there today and tomorrow. This Mercury-ruled moon may intensify the retrograde action of Mercury, generating unexpected obstacles, reversals, mechanical or electrical breakdowns. Making important decisions or signing contracts are definitely off limits. On the other hand, this period is prime for developing study or research projects or for making repairs or renovations. Mars and Neptune align at 12:00 p.m. A lunar contact to Saturn at 4:33 p.m. may bring a lull period, when energy is deflated. Plan a quiet evening.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31

A 90-degree alignment of the moon and Pluto at 6:46 a.m. may spark emotional thunderstorms. Avoid getting caught up in morning hassles or the blues. At this time the moon becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. No major planetary activity occurs. Take advantage of this period and get work projects, especially jobs you have been putting off, out of the way. You can be most productive. Clean out drawers and closets, get rid of items that are cluttering up your life. Zero in on diets and self-improvement programs. Take better care of yourself.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2002

The first half of February is prime for finishing old business, making repairs or renovations. It is a time for focusing on your inner, spiritual life rather than trying to forge ahead in your external, professional world. After the new moon on February 12, however, influences begin to turn around; on February 15 the green light for new starts goes on. Today a Libra moon and Venus/Pluto alignment places the spotlight on partnership matters. Influences are ideal for repairing relationships that have broken down, healing old wounds. A lunar opposition to Mars may spark romantic fireworks this evening.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2

A Libra moon continues to generate a social mood. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can be productive. Zero in on creative projects. Beautify your surroundings; purchase flowers, plants, decorative items for your home. At 7:45 p.m. the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive for the remainder of the evening. Break away from old routines and be more adventurous this evening.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 3

At 5:35 a.m. the moon enters Scorpio, remaining there for the next 2 1/2 days. Others may be pensive, moody, difficult to please. Don't make waves. This day is ideal for tackling projects that have been problematic and left hanging. You can work out the glitches and find solutions. Take extra quiet time out for yourself; pursue activities that help you to relax and unwind.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 4

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today as well. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agen da. Clean and reorganize; repair, repaint, remodel. The moon travels in Scorpio, and the sun prepares to align with Pluto. This combination is prime for making changes, transformations on an inner, personal level. Get back on track with programs to help you break bad habits. Let go of situations or relationships that are not working; find a new course of action for yourself. Look within for answers; open your heart to higher visions.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 5

The Scorpio moon aligns with Mercury at 9:02 a.m. and becomes inactive. A Sagittarius moon takes over at 10:21 a.m., generating a lighter, brighter mood. The sun forms a harmonious 60-degree contact to Pluto at 9:42 p.m., continuing to highlight personal transformations and projects that need redoing or renewal. Read yesterday's advice.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6

The combination of a Sagittarius moon and applying Venus/Uranus alignment makes this a wonderful day for vacationing. People will be cheerful and outgoing. If you are working, it may be difficult to settle down to practical matters and easy to overlook important details. Be careful not to go to extremes between 3:54-6:54 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. The remainder of the evening rates high for relaxing and enjoying favorite friends, leisure activities.

N. Cohasset could be put on town water

Could be part of deal to sell to Mass-American

By Mary Ford and Evan Schiff
MFORD@CNC.COM

As part of its negotiations with Mass-American Water Company that is seeking to purchase 500,000 gallons of water a day from Cohasset — the Water Department has put acquiring North Cohasset on the table.

Mass-American that serves Hingham, Hull and about 320 households in North Cohasset would like to buy water from Cohasset to ensure there is enough water for the burgeoning new development in its service area. However, Mass-American customers pay among the highest water rates in the country. So the Cohasset Water Department is looking into what it would cost to bring North Cohasset into the Cohasset municipal system, chairman John K. McNabb Jr. said. A move that would no doubt would be popular with those in that part of town.

The Water Commission laid out several Town Meeting warrant articles before selectmen Tuesday that would set the stage for an agreement to sell water to Mass-American, a Donald Ivas, the new administrative director of the Social Service League, stands outside St. Stephen's Church where the league's offices are located.

League introduces new director

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

"The best part of this job is knowing at the end of the day that something I did perhaps helped someone in a small way."
— Donald Ivas, administrative director

For more than 90 years the Social Service League of Cohasset has been a staple of the community. It traditionally has concentrated on helping elders in town and although the league still intends to help senior citizens — new Administrative Director Donald Ivas wants to breathe new life into the organization by branching out.

"We'd like to get involved with the youth and enriching the community," Ivas said. "We're not going to just focus on the elderly."

Ivas is the first paid administrative director in the league's lengthy history. President of the Board of Directors Motoko Deane said the board was looking to go in a different direction.

"We wanted to get more focused as an organization," Deane said. "We wanted a director who could tighten up the league and provide some administrative direction."

Deane said the board has become younger over the years and felt the seniors are well serviced by various groups in the town and wanted to expand. Ivas's outlook was the perfect match.

"He is a great fit because he has experience working with teens as a guidance counselor," Deane said. "He is also a licensed social worker and is very enthusiastic about the job."

Deane said his salary will be paid from private donations and revenue from the consignment shop, which the league operates in Tedeschi Plaza on Rt. 3A.

"We are planning on holding fund-raisers in the future to generate some more money," she said.

While Ivas has only been on the job for three weeks he has been

Library gets grant early

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

While recent headlines have painted a bleak financial picture across the South Shore, there is some positive economic news for Cohasset.

The state Board of Library Commissioners notified Cohasset that the town of Acushnet has provided written notification that it will not be able to accept its provisional grant award. The amount of the Acushnet grant would have been approximately $1.6 million and with the availability of the funds, the board is expected to award the money to Cohasset, which is number one on the waiting list at its meeting this week. Cohasset stands to receive $1.5 million.

At special Town Meeting in November, the library trustees asked residents to appropriate $1.5 million toward the library project and said they would pay for the interest on the loan — about $60,000 a year, until the grant became available. At the time, the trustees said Cohasset was first on the waiting list for the state grant and would receive the money. Still, with the current worries over the reimbursement of the School Building Assistance program, the grant comes as a breath of fresh air and is earlier than expected.

"We promised the town that we would pay the interest on the loan and we thought we'd be paying for at least three years," said Paul Pratt Library trustees chairman Patience Towle.

Ken Cisneros used to take a skeleton out of the closet to talk about anatomy to his seventh-grade science classes. But today the only skeletons in his closet are old computers and his classroom has expanded to include his colleagues.

School technology has quietly revolutionized education. Cohasset is no exception as the town and schools have made technology education—whose primary component is the world of computers but also includes video equipment and digital cameras — a priority.

"Our students are living it and it behooves the school staff to use technology as part of their educational strategy."
— Supt. Edward Malvey

"It's an absolute must is a quality district," said Supt. Edward Malvey about incorporating technology into the classroom. "Our students are living it and it behooves the school staff to use technology as part of their educational strategy."

As the school department technology director, Cisneros talks in the language of gigabytes and megabytes while at the same time explaining to his fellow teachers in plain English computers will make their lives easier.

Schoolchildren for the most part are computer savvy, he says. They are likely to have computers at home and have definitely become the offspring of the technological age.

But just as some people had to be dragged kicking and screaming into automobiles at the turn of the last century — the computer, which is every bit as revolutionary, can be daunting to those who grew up with the comfort of a typewriter.

"My biggest complaint from teachers is 'I don't have time to do that…'," Cisneros says about teachers learning to use the computer as a tool.

The approach today is not so much the technology, he says, but the philosophy that computers aren't adding something to what busy teachers are already doing, but will actually make their jobs easier.

Cohasset taxpayers have supported technology in the schools through their pocketbooks by appropriating more than $450,000 over the past four years. The technology plan for the schools took root in 1997-1998 with wiring for the middle-high school and Deer Hill, the initiation of staff development, and making the new

New light could prevent crashes

Beechwood signal might be changed

A five-tiered traffic light may be the relief that Cohasset's most dangerous intersection needs.

Representatives from the MassHighway Department listened to concerns expressed by selectmen Tuesday about the dangers of the intersection at Route 3A and Beechwood.

"We've got a problem, you are the ones who control it, and we want it fixed," said Selectman Michael Sullivan.

The consensus among selectmen was what was needed was a turning lane to alleviate the problem of vehicles being broad-sided while turning left onto Beechwood from 3A.

"We don't jump at every request just because a community feels an intersection is dangerous."
— Bernard McCourt, MassHighway

However Bernard McCourt, the representative from Mass Highway, said the statistics do not support the claim that the intersection is that bad.

"We don't jump at every request just because a community feels an intersection is dangerous," he said. "We have thousands of intersection dubbed 'hazardous' and this does not come close to that."

Cemetery office

Selectmen thanked Glenn Pratt, chairman of the Cemetery Committee, for orchestrating the new cemetery office at the DPW building off Cedar Street. Pratt donated the materials for the project.

"This beautiful space will provide a more professional setting for the DPW to conduct cemetery business," Town Manager Mark Haddad stated. "Cohasset is fortunate to have an individual like yourself willing to give unselfishly to the town."

For information on burial options or to set up an appointment at the new office, call 781-383-0273.

Parking violations

Town Manager Mark Haddad asked police to increase enforcement of parking violations in and around the harbor area. He said the selectmen's office has received several complaints about vehicles parking on the sidewalk along Border Street forcing pedestrians into the street.

"I would ask that you monitor this situation and report back to me on the enforcement of parking violations on Border Street," Haddad wrote to Police Chief Brian Noonan.

Reached by telephone Sgt. Robert Jackson said an e-mail message went out to all police officers regarding enforcement in the area. He explained there is a rolling sidewalk along Border Street that has no curb and is delineated with a white line. Some motorists park so far over they completely obstruct the sidewalk making it impossible for pedestrians or a wheelchair to pass by. Officers can use their discretion if a motor vehicle is just a couple of inches over the line, he said.

Hazardous trees

Tree warden Andy Swanson is recommending the town remove five dead Norway maple trees on Short Street.

In a letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad, Swanson stated the town does not have the equipment to cut down trees of this size and there was no line item in the budget to hire an outside contractor for the job. The electric company won't help because there are no wires in the trees, he said.

Swanson contacted Stoughton-based Maltby & Co., which has done work for the town in the past, which estimated removing the trees would cost $2,600, not including a police detail.

Haddad sent the request on to the Advisory Committee.

Town Meeting change proposed

Town Meeting voters will have the chance to change the date of Town Meeting that is normally schedule for the last weekend in March. The by-law amendment that would require a 2/3 vote would state: "On or before Dec. 1 of the preceding year, the Board of Selectmen shall set a date for the following year's Annual Town Meeting. The Annual Town Meeting shall be on a Saturday commencing at 10 a.m. in either March or April of any year."

Where to file jet noise complaints

Town Manager Mark Haddad said residents can file noise complaints about air traffic with Massport Director Thomas J. Klinton, Jr., One Harbor Drive, Suite 200S, East Boston, MA 02128-2909. (Telephone, 617-561-1600).

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed asked his fellow board members to read recent noise complaints he received. Plans are to make the matter an agenda item at an upcoming meeting.

Pleasant Street fence dispute

Mary Bohmer of Pleasant Street was back before selectmen last week complaining that the board had done nothing about an ongoing fence dispute she has with a neighbor. Bohmer claims the town allowed the construction of her next-door neighbor's fence on her property.

Town Manager Mark Haddad subsequently talked with Ted Purdy (Bohmer's neighbor) and building inspector Bob Egan. Egan reviewed the matter and said the fence is clearly on Purdy's property with the exception of the font post that is exactly on the property line but leans toward Bohmer's property.

"Mr. Purdy has informed me he will straighten out the fence to resolve the issue," Haddad stated in his weekly report to selectmen.

Bohmer told selectmen last week she had hired an attorney to look into the matter.

Field trips go ahead

At last month's School Committee meeting, board members approved two field trips for Cohasset's High School. Although there was concern over security and insurance issues, the board granted approval for a Music Department trip to New York and a Science Department trip to Coast Rica.

In the fall of last year, after Sept. 11, the School Committee was reluctant to grant permission for the field trips and asked both departments to come back after the new year. The consensus of the board was that it was now safe to travel.

The music trip will be from April 26-28 and will take the high school band and chorus to New York for a Creative Arts Workshop Showcase.

The group will attend a Broadway Show and compete is various showcases.

Although final figures are not definite, the anticipated cost will be about $350 a person not including meals and spending money.

The more elaborate trip to Costa Rica will be a nine-day trek over the students' April break.

The trip begins in the La Selva Biological Research Station which is home to 420 species of birds and 120 species of mammals in a tropical rainforest.

Students will hike through various indigenous reserves learning about the culture and customs of the locals. The group will also spend a day of white-water rafting on the Pacuare River which is described as the most scenic and famous rivers in the country.

"These both sound like wonderful trips," said chairman Stephanie Noble.

Celebrating community service

Spirit of Community

Do you know a young man or woman who goes above and beyond to give back to others and to their community? A teenager who puts in hours outside the classroom or on the playing field to make a difference? Our "Spirit of Community" campaign recognizes, honors and celebrates these community-service minded students each month in our Living section.

We encourage our readers to nominate young people that fit this bill. You'll find our Spirit of Community ballot on page 2 of the Living section this week. We look forward to hearing from you.

Town and schools use teamwork on budget

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Maybe it's the tough financial times, or maybe it's the teamwork displayed by the Patriots, but whatever it is, the schools have decided to go with the town manager's recommended budget increase of 6 percent.

Initially, the school department sought a budget hike of about 11 percent — or $1.1 million over last year — but Town Manager Mark Haddad's asked the School Committee and superintendent to set their sights lower.

"In the spirit of cooperation we had to stretch our budget to make it work," Supt. Edward Malvey said.

The School Committee was expected to approve the budget at a public hearing last night (Wednesday) after the Mariner went to press.

School officials have emphasized classroom size as one of their concerns in light of increasing enrollment, and the budget includes three new teaching positions.

"As a parent, and one who is studying education, I felt classroom size was the number one priority and the committee agreed," said School Committee chairman Stephanie Noble.

"In the spirit of cooperation we had to stretch our budget to make it work,"
— Supt. Edward Malvey

With the 6 percent increase ($600,000 over last year's budget) — $410,500 is tied up in existing salaries. That leaves the schools with an additional $189,500 to work with. Of that, approximately two-thirds will be used for salaries for the three new teachers (two for the Middle/High School and one for the Deer Hill School).

Other areas receiving money from the remainder of the budget increase include the technology department which will receive almost $5,000 to be used for network support and $10,000 will be slated to prepare for the high school re-accreditation process, which will begin next year.

As has been practice in prior years, $100,000 of the school department budget will not be funded until the fall special Town Meeting. Haddad said there are still a lot of variables to be figured out such as the amount of state aid the town will receive and the total enrollment of the school for next year.

"Nine-months is just too far ahead to determine final financial numbers," he said. "We'll have a clearer picture in the fall."

Malvey stressed even with a lower budget than preferred, the school system is still going to provide the same level of education that has been a hallmark of the school system. He said items such as additional personnel, additional clerical support, equipment needs, instructional supplies and supplementary supplies took a hit in the reduced budget but the schools will operate smoothly without them.

Malvey said the main reason the committee decided to go with a lower proposed budget than it wanted was the current economic times and the possible delay of reimbursement of the town's $40 million school renovation projects through the state School Building Assistance program. If the SBAB reimbursment is delayed it could add approximately $875 to the average taxpayer's bill for several years.

Haddad said he is very appreciative with the way the School Committee handled the budget.

Fictional portrayal offends mother visiting Osgood

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When "Sgt. D" takes over the microphone to make announcements to start the day at the Osgood School the pupils and staff usually find it an enjoyable experience.

Physical Education teacher Kevin Dykas has occasionally pinch-hit for the principal and guidance counselor on the microphone over the past year and has developed a "voice" that he uses for his fictional characters like Sgt. D. According to Osgood Principal Janet Sheehan – Dykas uses the same "voice" for all of his characters.

But Friday morning, Claudia Quigley was waiting in the school lobby with her five-year-old son when Dykas's "voice" came over the public address system. Dykas was portraying "Bubba Smith," a fictional brother of New England Patriots' running back Antoine Smith to gear the kids up for Super Bowl Sunday.

But to Quigley – who submitted a lengthy letter to the School Committee that is printed on page 6 – the "imitation" that she said was replete with poor diction and grammar was not funny at all. In fact, the portrayal which she interpreted was that of "a dumb black person" displayed the worst in racial stereotypes.

Quigley and her husband Andrew Quigley, who did not hear Dykas, both relayed their dismay to Sheehan and the School Committee. The Quigleys' son is not a student at the school but goes there for special services.

However, Sheehan who is nonplused by the accusations, says Mrs. Quigley was alone in what she heard.

"There isn't anyone I've discussed this with who sees it that way," Sheehan said about Mrs. Quigley's allegations of racism.

Dykas said he tries to spice up the morning PA announcements with his characters and uses the same "low voice" for all of them. He said he thought of "Bubba Smith" on the spur of the moment and didn't choose Drew Bledsoe or Tom Brady because they were so familiar.

"I wanted something different that would make the kids think a little more," he said. Dykas said the entire monologue lasted about 10 seconds and said something to the effect, "boys and girls I've come a long way to visit you and I have to head back to New Orleans, so be sure to root for the Patriots."

Dykas said he did not use bad grammar or slang or say anything that would be offensive to anyone.

"I'm in total shock," he said about the Quigleys' reaction. Far from being a racist, Dykas says he embraces diversity. For example, he works with the METCO program and Breakfast Club in the mornings before school organizing physical education activities to get the two groups together. METCO kids, who come from Boston, are there early and the Breakfast Club is for children whose parents leave for work before school starts.

School Committee Chairman Stephanie Noble said Dykas was not capable of racist behavior and was outraged by the Quigleys' letter.

"Everyone has a right to their opinion," she said. "But we all need to stop for a minute and not think about what is politically correct but what we know in our hearts to be true.

"Mr. Dykas is not capable of that kind of behavior he is accused of and I stand behind him 100 percent."

Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey said he had not seen the letter but understood what happened involved a parent who walked into the school and overheard something that has been done a number of times as a "spoof" and took the matter completely out of context.

"I view it as an overreaction to a spoof – to role playing – after walking into a situation," he said. "We're not going to close down shop because one person has a reaction."

The Quigleys suggest the School Committee contact the Anti-Defamation League to conduct a training session for all school staff.

Sheehan, the principal, said teachers have had training in multi-culturalism and diversity awareness but would "always be willing to grow in that area in a positive direction."

"But I think this is something that has gotten out of hand and the accusations are very offensive to us," she said.

Restating the CMHS mission

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It is in front of every student's agenda book and will be laminated and posted in every classroom once construction is completed at the school. The statement will be widely displayed in order to communicate the message to the students.

"We were trying to capture what the school represents."
— Maura Devin, committee chairman

And why not? After all, a mission statement is supposed to inspire, enlighten and guide those people it speaks to.

"It's important the students really understand what we're trying to accomplish with the mission statement," said teacher Maura Devin, who chaired the committee made of parents, students, and administration and faculty members.

"The changes were minor this year," Devin said. "We are continually trying to perfect the statement."

The process began three years ago in anticipation of the reaccreditation process run by the New England Association of Secondary Schools. The NEASS "strongly suggested" that the school solidify its philosophy in a mission statement.

Changes to the mission statement include the revising the phrase, providing moral education for the students, to the students being given the opportunity to practice respect and responsibility. Devin said students objected to the word "morally" because they felt the school should not be concerned with their moral development. The committee agreed and felt "respect and responsibility" was more appropriate.

The second change re-worded the first sentence of the statement. Originally, the sentence read, "…school is to provide educational experiences that prepare the students academically, physically and emotionally." Devin explained the committee thought it was more effective to put the most important aspect last. Academically now appears after physically and emotionally.

"We were trying to capture what the school represents," she said. "It was quite a challenge."

Devin presented the update to the School Committee last month along with fellow teacher Marie Schleiff.

School Committee member Pat Martin, said she is pleased with the way the statement looks.

"It is tremendous you got such input from both students and teachers," she said. "It really is a statement that people feel is fantastic."

The mission statement committee brainstormed for a few months before trying to revise the statement. Devin said the process was a lengthy one because the committee wanted to ensure it sent the right message.

Devin said current curriculum in the school is driven by the statement.

"It's important the students really understand what we're trying to accomplish with the mission statement," she said.

Text of CMHS mission statement

"As we enter the twenty-first century, the Mission of the Cohasset Middle-High School is to provide educational experiences that prepare students physically, emotionally and academically. Our mission is to help students develop an ability to think critically and creatively while investigating the past, examining the present, and preparing for the challenging future. Students are given the opportunity to form personal goals, to practice respect and responsibility, and to view learning as a lifelong process. Our small size enables students, faculty, parents, and community members to become partners in creating a nurturing environment in which students can achieve a strong sense of self and can involve themselves in diverse learning experiences."

Eric Moore receives Gold Key honors at Boston College

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

SUPER PATRIOTS!

Hello, Cohasset. The cold weather is here and it feels almost good to me, at least a little more seasonal. Now, bring on some snow! Congratulations go out from Cohasset to the New England Patriots! What a great game and a wonderful Super Bowl. Although Monday brought about some rather, tired people, it was well worth it for all.

GOLD KEY HONOR SOCIETY

Meg and Bob Moore of Sohier Street, are a pair of super proud parents who have some wonderful news to share with us. Their son, Eric, has been invited to be inducted into the Gold Key International Honor Society that recognizes college seniors with a record of academic excellence. Eric, a marketing major, attends Boston College where he has been named to the dean's list every semester. A ceremony for those being honored is planned for later this month. Eric's brother Travis is a sophomore at Bryant College where he was named to the dean's list this past term. And Jason, a senior at CHS, is in the process of applying to colleges. Congratulations to all of you!

DAFFODIL DAYS

The American Cancer Society's Daffodil Days are coming and volunteers are being sought. If you are able to come forward as a volunteer as a sales coordinator for your town or business, or to work in the office in March to map out driving routes, or to help make deliveries the week of April 1, you are needed! If you want to volunteer or order a bouquet of daffodils for $6, call the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880 and press 3 for ext. 243. Orders must be placed by March 15.

ORGAN CONCERT

This Sunday, Feb. 10 is the Cohasset's Second Congregational Church's Organ Concert at 3 p.m. This event is to celebrate the arrival of their new state-of-the-art digital organ and will be played by Roger Mansen, a professional organist from Concord, Mass. Roger will showcase the organ's capabilities with a selection of music from spiritual to pop. The concert is free and refreshments will be served. For more information, call 781-383-0345

Stephanie Perkinson has been named to the dean's list at the University of Massachusetts at Dartmouth for having a gpa of 3.2 or higher for the fall 2001 semester. Stephanie is majoring in textile design.

DEAN'S LIST

Roger Williams University announces dean's list for the fall 2001 semester. Jared Ford of Rustic Drive and Carolyn Pratt of King Street were both named to this list with GPAs of 3.4 or higher.

Susan D. Thompson and Amy Weidenbach have been named to the dean's list at Emmanuel College for the fall semester. Both ladies had to earn a GPA of 3.5 or higher to achieve this distinction.

Congratulations to all of the students who are working so hard to achieve these many honors. Whether in grade school, college or pre-school, we certainly want to hear about all our children's achievements. Keep passing along the information to me as I love to hear and spread the good news.

CALLING CLASS OF 1982

Anyone out there from the CHS Class of 1982? If so, then this message is for you. A meeting is happening this Sunday, Feb. 10 to discuss and help plan the upcoming 20th Reunion. If you are interested in helping or know of any classmates who may be, please call Marcy Brown Fleming at 781-585-9913.

SPIRIT NIGHT

The High School Basketball Team is hosting a Spirit Night this Friday at Cohasset Middle/High School at 6:30 p.m. The team will be playing against Carver and have asked that anyone out there who can come to show spirit and support for the team do so. Any student who comes wearing a recreation T-shirt will be admitted free as long as they are with a paying adult.

A 50/50 raffle will be held and a yummy, concession stand will be open to satisfy those rumbling tummies of all. Come on out and cheer this team onto victory!

VALENTINE'S TEA

The Senior Valentine's Tea is being held this Friday, Feb. 8 from 1-3 p.m. and is being held at the South Shore Community Center.

The PSO Community Relations Committee is sponsoring a bake drive on Feb. 7 where all delicious baked goods may be dropped off at a table in the Osgood main entrance. If your child has helped with the goodie, feel free to enclose a special note and/or picture with the treat. This is a wonderful way for the town to show support for our Seniors and to include our children in the act of giving. So bring out the measuring cups, mixing bowls and flour and share your love and caring with others. It is greatly appreciated by all.

UMASS HONOR

Naomi Ansbergs, Class of 2000 and attending UMass Amherst was recently asked to join Alpha Lamda Delta because of her hard work and honors that she has received. Naomi's family is extremely proud of her as they well should be and we would love to hear more about this young lady.

PARENTS OF TEENS

The Social Service League of Cohasset is offering a support group for parents of teens that are experiencing turbulent times in their lives. The group would provide the opportunity for parents to share their concerns about teen lifestyles and experimentation that may present symptoms of stress and anxiety in the lives of parents.

The confidential support program affords parents the opportunity to share their concerns and explore options to deal with this issue. The discussion is facilitated by a licensed clinical social worker and examines the input from all those with concerns.

This support group is strictly confidential and held every other Monday from 6:30-7:45 p.m. Space is limited to 10. If you are interested, please call 781-383-0771.

PIANIST PERFORMS AT ST. STEPHEN'S

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now it its 11th year, St. Stephen's Church is presenting pianist Paul Carlson in a recital on Sunday, Feb. 10 at 3 p.m. Dr. Carlson, a graduate of Boston University, is an expert in the music and performance style of Debussy. Other areas of his expertise and interest include the music of pianists active during the several decades before World War I. Recent premiers by Carlson include works by Native Massachusetts composers John McDonald and Hayg Boyadjian. An experienced recitalist, Carlson has performed widely in the Boston area, maintains a large teaching studio in Arlington, and has taught at Gordon College and the Tanglewood Institute.

Another important feature of the recital is that it is to be the first performance played on the church's newly-refurbished 1906 Steinway grand piano, recently rebuilt by Brian Grinrod of New Hampshire.

A free-will offering will be taken. Also, there will be a reception following the concert. For more information, call 781-383-1083.

That is all the news for this week. Make sure to pass on all information to me in one of the following ways.

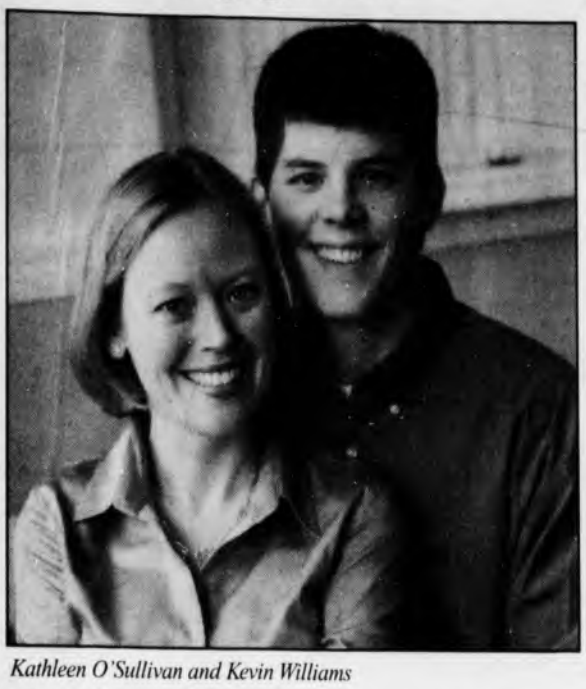
O'Sullivan - Williams engagement



Kathleen O'Sullivan and Kevin Williams

Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah F. O'Sullivan of Cohasset are pleased to announce the engagement of their daughter, Kathleen, to Mr. Kevin Williams, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Williams of Amherst.

Miss O'Sullivan is a 1993 graduate of Cohasset High School and a 1997 graduate of Brown University. She currently resides in Boston and is a reporter for Inc. Magazine.

Her fiancé is a 1995 graduate of Boston College and is senior account at The Parthenon Group in Boston.

A September 2002 wedding is planned.

Relay kick-off is Feb. 12

In anticipation of the American Cancer Society's sixth annual Relay For Life in Cohasset, the volunteer planning committee is hosting a kick-off on Tuesday, Feb. 12 from 6-8 p.m. at P.J.'s Country House, 227 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Route 3A in Scituate. Area residents hoping to start a relay team for the first time or just interested in learning more about Relay For Life are encouraged to join this informational session from 6-7 p.m. Veteran team members are welcome to join at 7 p.m. The kickoff is an opportunity to hear about last year's results, preview this year's event and receive team captain packets and materials. Hors d'ouvres will be served and there will be a cash bar.

For more information, contact Event Chair, Gordon Behrer at 617-770-7989 or email him at gcbehrer@aol.com; or Mary Shepherd at the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880 and press 3 for Ext. 229.

The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset is set for Friday and Saturday, May 17 and 18 at Cohasset High School. Relay For Life is the cancer society's signature activity taking place in more than 3,000 communities nationwide.

Local woman is top bowler

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Patriots aren't the only athletes in the state that are number one.

Florence Stanford, 100 Pond St., was named the top women's senior ten-pin bowler in Massachusetts by the Massachusetts Women's Bowling Association last month.

Stanford, whose average is 143, was taken aback by the honor.

"This was a complete surprise," she said. "I never expected something like this would happen to me."

Stanford said she competes in two or three tournaments a year and has never finished in first place before. However, at a recent tournament in Brockton which she won — she was hitting on all cylinders.

"I bowled my highest game of my life," she said. "It was definitely unexpected."

Stanford, who is 71-years-old, bowled a 201 at the tournament to cement her position as the state's top senior bowler. The tournament was the lone qualifier for the distinction.

As a reward for the honor, Stanford will fly to Reno in April where she'll compete in the national tournament representing this state. She also received a check for about $300 and will get a T-shirt and pin when she is honored at a luncheon in Fitchburg later this year.

Stanford started bowling 20 years ago after her sister introduced her to the sport. She used to bowl at Wonderbowl in Quincy, but now is in a competitive league and bowls every Wednesday morning at Boston Bowl in Dorchester.

"I love going there to meet with the girls," she said. "We call it our therapy."

Stanford, who bowls with a 10-pound ball, said she enjoys bowling for the social aspects as much as the athletic ones. She said the secret to her success is the support she receives from her friends and the fact she doesn't take bowling too seriously.

"There's usually a lot of talking and horsing around there," she said. "We're all really supportive of one another."

Florence Stanford is the top female, senior bowler in the state.

Stanford, who has lived in Cohasset for the past 40 years, has 10 children and 23 grandchildren. She said most of her relatives live in the area and have been extremely happy about her success.

"They called and said how proud they were of me," she said.

Her daughter, Florence O'Brien, said she is so excited for her mother.

"We're all so absolutely thrilled for her," she said. "We're trying to get her as ecstatic about this recognition as we are."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Thanks, Pats

On Sunday, the Patriots restored our faith in some of the most enduring values — playing hard, playing fair, sticking to it when the odds are against you, and working together as a team. And, oh yeah, staying humble on the meteoric rise to sports greatness, something that is hardly ever seen.

In pre-game shows, the sports talking heads dismissed the Patriots as out of their league against the mighty Rams, so it was all the more sweet when the Patriots beat St. Louis in the final seconds of the game.

For dreaming and achieving the impossible, the Patriots have been dubbed Cinderella fellas. In this case, the glass slipper fits.

What a thrill it was when Adam Vinatieri kicked the winning 48-yard field goal and the New Orleans stadium erupted.

Quarterbacks Tom Brady and Drew Bledsoe have consistently come across as class acts in a sport known for oversized egos and team infighting. Bledsoe, sidelined for most of the season with an injury, graciously allowed the younger, less experienced Brady to share in the limelight. In the spirit of true sportsmanship, Brady has kept things in perspective, staying down to earth even as the Patriots advanced in the playoffs and made it to the Super Bowl. So centered was Brady about Sunday's game that he took a nap just before starting time.

This year's Super Bowl game was played against the backdrop of Sept. 11 and it came as no surprise that patriotism was the dominant theme. Who could miss the symbolism of former President George Bush, an old warrior in the fight against terrorism, doing the coin toss? Democratic values have prevailed in the face of unspeakable evils perpetrated around the globe.

There was also an unmistakable effort to make the Super Bowl not just a distinctly American phenomenon and to tone down the macho-ness of the event. The Irish rock group U2 performed at half-time, singing of love on a stage illuminated in the shape of a heart. The names of those killed on Sept. 11 scrolled down an invisible screen, rolling down from the heavens, a touching reminder of all the nation has been through in the past six months and all that we have lost. In a pre-game chat with TV sports commentators, Beatle Paul McCartney said wouldn't it be fitting if a team called the Patriots won the Super Bowl this year. Indeed.

For all that we have lost since Sept. 11, the Patriots reminded us on Sunday of all that we have not lost. As the two teams were introduced just before the game started, each starting Rams player was introduced individually and invited to step out onto the field to bask in the glory, much like Roman gladiators. The Patriots stepped out onto the field as a group, putting their individual egos aside for the moment. How often do we see that?

In the exuberant moments just after winning the game, quarterback Tom Brady said he didn't feel like a hero. The real heroes right now, he said, are the men and women defending democratic values in far flung places in the world. The real heroes risked their own lives on Sept. 11 to save others, he said.

The New England Patriots did us proud on Sunday and the way they conducted themselves under pressure should serve as role models for us all.

Way to go, Pats!

LWV to discuss education reform

The Hingham League of Women Voters will hold a consensus meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 13 at 7:30 p.m. at 40 Park View Drive, Hingham. League members are encouraged to review the state education reform information mailed in the Voter prior to attending the discussion meeting, the purpose of which is to reach consensus. After consensus is achieved the results will be sent to the state League. New superhighway is coming to town!

TO THE EDITOR:

But – Not on the ground – right over our heads!

Nearly half of Logan's traffic passes over us now. Massport plans to put 100,000 more flights over Cohasset with its proposed runway expansion. 100,000 more flights per year means 280 more flights per day! Logan Tower now directs all nighttime jets on low approach to fly over the South Shore whenever possible. In fact, Massport routinely violates a formal 1980 Record of Decision requiring all departing traffic to fly offshore.

No one wants to deal with litigation, but Massport listens to nothing else. A team of South Shore residents spent countless hours designing and presenting new flight paths to reduce noise by sending both arriving and departing planes offshore close to Boston Light. An airline captain who has flown the Logan routes for years crafted every detail. It's a simple matter to make an easy dogleg during the approach to runway 33L and to fly departing aircraft to 12,000 feet before passing back over the coast. Massport refuses to consider any of these suggestions. To preserve the health and property values of our town we must resort to the courts and quickly.

Even if you don't notice the planes, you will be impacted by the emissions. The noise is an audible warning of a much more serious problem. Jet fuel contains highly toxic substances, including benzene and formaldehyde. A health study at Chicago's O'Hare International airport concluded that cancer risks near the airport were five times higher than the regional average. A separate government study in Seattle found 37 percent greater risk of cancer death for residents near that airport. The map of post-runway jet traffic over Cohasset will probably serve as a statistical map for future cancer clusters. This is a serious public health issue. We owe it to ourselves and our children to stop the runway and we should demand over the ocean flights for current traffic.

We can make a difference! Others have — residents near Heathrow in London won a victory when The European Court of Human Rights limited night-time flights because the noise levels were violating residents' rights to a full night of sleep.

We need to get to town meeting in March and vote to support Hull, Hingham and Revere in their suit against Massport for misrepresenting the actual impact of the proposed expansion. We need to call our local, state and federal representatives (numbers are listed in the front of the Rotary phone book) and we need to express our opposition to the expansion and our concern with the current noise and emissions. We need to stand with the 30 other Boston-area communities that oppose the runway. We cannot afford to let Massport continue to abuse the South Shore.

Your contribution of time and money and your vote can make the difference. For more information go to http://www.southshorejetpollution.org or send your donation to the South Shore Jet Pollution Charitable Trust, P.O. Box 452, Hingham MA 02043.

Racial stereotyping at Osgood School?

DEAR SCHOOL COMMITTEE MEMBERS:

I am writing to express my dismay over the behavior of a staff member at the Joseph Osgood School on the morning of Feb. 1, 2002. I was sitting with my 5-year-old son in the front lobby waiting for his occupational therapy session to start and had the opportunity to hear that day's morning announcements over the P.A. system. A teacher was making the announcements. After he discussed general business he launched into what I have learned is one of several of his regular character voices that he portrays over the announcements to the students. On this particular occasion he portrayed a character named "Bubba Smith," the fictional brother of New England Patriots player Antoine Smith.

I was shocked and then outraged as he launched into the most offensive "imitation" — and I use the term loosely — of what he thought a man of color or of African-American heritage should sound like. His "imitation" was replete with poor diction and grammatical errors and sounded like the bumbling fool he wanted to portray. I could hardly believe that I was sitting in the lobby of a public elementary school!

Imagine then my further shock and dismay when I entered the main office to discuss the matter with the principal to find the office staff and other school staff (who, from my cursory glance around the room, were all white) laughing at these antics. When I expressed my concern and disgust at the teacher's routine, a staff member expressed her surprise that I did not find it funny. My complaint to the immediate staff was met with blank stares. Ms. Sheehan, the Osgood Principal, was not available so I left a message with her secretary about my concerns and that I would like to speak with her about the incident.

Upon returning home I found a message from the teacher on my machine stating in an unpleasant voice that he was upset with accusations made by me and he wanted to discuss the issue with me. The only accusation that I made was that I found his "routine" to be offensive and unacceptable for release over a public elementary school public address system.

We feel that to have a white man imitate what he thinks an African American man should sound like (in this case, a bumbling, Southern fool with poor grammar and diction) over a public address system to elementary school children was akin to the minstrel shows of the 1920 and 30s. The teacher may as well have been made up in "black face" and singing "Mammy" like a local version of Al Jolson.

Further compounding the situation is the reaction of staff to the situation: their laughter — their inability to see that anything was amiss — their belief that what he did was OK.

According to recent official statistics reported in the press, Cohasset is 99% percent white. We do, however, have families of other ethnic groups who reside in town and send their children to our schools. We are also a host community to METCO and have many African American children who travel a great distance at a very early hour and tender age to come here for an education. What kind of message are we sending to these children?

The children at the Osgood are the youngest in our system. They laugh at this teacher and his antics. They may not be able to understand just yet what racial stereotyping is. But the manner in which he talks and behaves sticks with them. It will stick in their minds as surely as anything that we teach them in our schools. The danger of what this teacher said and the staff's reaction is that its impact will reinforce negative stereotypes already in the minds of some children in town and it will impact the beliefs of children who haven't yet formulated opinions about race, religious beliefs, and regional differences. Unfortunately, the teacher's routine and the sanctioning laughter of staff will play an important role in the formulation of opinions as these children grow and see the expanded world beyond Cohasset's shores.

Ms. Sheehan called us and she offered that we were taking this routine out of context. She said she believed that there was no intent on the teacher's part to demean any racial group. However, she acknowledged that the teacher was speaking in a "Southern dialect." But even taking this best-case scenario — and for the record, we cannot imagine any "context" in which a white man purports to imitate a person of color as being acceptable — the bottom line is that those who speak and act differently than us were being ridiculed over the Osgood PA system. Is it not a far stretch to expect that children who have a speech impediment, for example, might be ridiculed as "Bubba" by their classmates thanks to the ignorant actions of this teacher? Moreover, if the teacher had the aim of bringing Super Bowl fever into the school, why did he not choose a fictional character such as the brother of, let's say, Tom Brady?

We are sending this letter to you, the members of the School Committee, in the sincere hope that, as the elected representatives of our community, you both investigate this issue and take appropriate action to ensure not only that this behavior ceases, but also that sensitivity training to stereotyping of all kinds — racial, ethnic, gender, etc. — be implemented among the staff of the Cohasset school system. This is especially true because this teacher's routine comes on the heels of the Superintendent's recent — and widely condemned — comments concerning the potential impact of low-income special needs students on our school budget, which created an image of Cohasset as unfriendly to those who are from diverse backgrounds.

We suggest that the committee contact the Anti-Defamation League to conduct a training session for all school staff. The inability of our school staff members to recognize that what occurred over the Osgood PA system was insensitive is deplorable, in our view. Cohasset's public school staff is in need of training to help them recognize and understand the complexities of racial, religious, and cultural differences and relations between people if they truly are to stand as role models who shape young minds.

School Building Assistance faces turbulent times

THE HEDLUND REPORT

SEN. ROBERT HEDLUND

With the release this past week of Governor Swift's $23.5 billion budget proposal, the Legislature stands poised to undertake a new budget season fraught with numerous challenges. Perhaps one of the most significant issues to surface early in the debate is a line item that impacts the bottom line for many cities and towns directly and in some cases immediately; cuts in funding to the School Building Assistance program.

As you may have heard or read, the Department of Education (DOE) has decided to scale back its reimbursement process for first year school construction projects, and in Fiscal Year '03 plans to take only 19 projects off the priority waiting list. They caution that other funding requirements, including increases for Chapter 70 funding and the new special education "Circuit Breaker" program that will provide reimbursements to municipalities implementing Individual Education Plans (IEPs) for special education students will cost several million dollars alone in new spending. So if the rate continues at the FY03 pace of approximately 20 new first year reimbursements annually, Cohasset will have to wait another five and seven years respectively to see reimbursements on the Deer Hill Elementary School project and the Middle/High School project.

I have been at the forefront on this issue, making an effort to bring it to the attention of my colleagues on Beacon Hill and urging them to get involved. Earlier in the month I also invited town officials from Cohasset, Duxbury, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth to meet with the state Board of Education, where they were able to voice their concerns regarding this critical program. And I plan to offer an amendment during the upcoming budget debate to restore adequate funding levels to the program.

While reductions in state revenues are taking their toll on many worthy programs which regularly receive state funding, the DOE has made it a practice over the past several years to fund these projects at a record pace and virtually guarantee cities and towns that made it onto the priority list that their projects would see reimbursements in a condensed time frame. Many projects have already begun, placing numerous cities and towns in financial jeopardy as they relied on the implicit assurances of DOE that funding was in the pipeline, making long-range plans that did not include extended debt payments.

I believe that most of those towns affected do understand the current economic climate and the demands being placed on the dollars available for worthy programs across the board. However, many of these towns have already taken on short-term debt obligations of five years or less so that they may begin school construction projects based on an understanding that projects on the wait list were normally seeing state reimbursements within that time frame. Now, accordingly to the DOE officials who spoke at last week's GOP briefing on the subject, cities and towns are looking at a waiting period of somewhere between eight and ten years to see these funds. This is a tough pill for many of us to swallow. The delay in reimbursements for Cohasset's two school construction projects could feasibly raise the average homeowner's property tax bill by $875 per year should the borrowing period need to be extended to 2010 instead of 2005.

While DOE has at times indicated the reimbursements might pick back up with better budget times, they have also publicly stated that they plan to continue the scale back, tightening up the process for future wait list placements and focusing more on renovation and restoration projects than new construction.

I am hopeful that through the combined efforts of my colleagues and me, the SBAB line items will receive thorough debate as the budget season progresses. Passing the state's balance sheet woes off onto individual cities and towns is an unfair ploy and may prove crippling to local municipalities' tax bases.

Rising demand collides with state's fiscal woes

School building grants take a hit

By Rick Collins and Michael P. Norton
STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Call it a case of bad timing. Just as demand for state assistance for local school construction projects peaks, state government, faced with a $2 billion budget shortfall, is cutting back.

— news analysis —

The number of Bay State school districts jumping on the waiting list has grown 600 percent in the past six years. Local proponents of less than 50 projects were in the line for funding in 1996. Now the list is more than 300 projects long. And after shelling out record amounts of school building aid during the last three years, the state is cutting back and focusing scarce funds instead on in-classroom activities. Instead of boosting school building aid by $50 million, Acting Gov. Swift wants to invest only $20 million more.

The decision to pull back has generated a strong backlash from taxpayers in communities with major projects underway. They are fearful they will be hit with large property tax bills because of expected delays in state reimbursements. And those communities near the end of the waiting list are worried that another generation of students will have to get by in aging, substandard classrooms and buildings.

"We need to collectively come up with some type of solution here," said Education Committee co-chair Rep. Peter Larkin, D-Pittsfield. "Demand is outstripping the supply of money. But you don't make promises you can't fulfill."

Larkin and his Senate counterpart Robert Antonioni, D-Leominster, both said they understand the bleak state fiscal picture. But they're also leery of breaking commitments to cities and towns and aware of the demand for school construction aid – there's now $300 million worth of unfunded projects, up from $96 million in 1999, according to the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation.

The state has been trying to address the problem. Between 2000 and 2002, it increased school building assistance funding by 33 percent, up to $361 million a year. The hand wringing over Swift's call to boost program funding by only 7 percent, enough to advance 19 projects, is more of a reflection of the overwhelming demand for new schools.

Jeff Wulfson, the state's deputy commissioner for school finance, said the school construction craze is a stark change from 20 years ago when the state "couldn't give construction dollars away."

Back then, Massachusetts was also mired in tough fiscal times and cites and towns were beginning to cope with the tax-limiting provisions of Proposition 2-1/2. And many communities felt their schools were still viable. Demand for schools grew in the 1990s, but communities delayed projects until the economy strengthened.

The economic boom of the 1990s left communities confident that they could handle the fiscal challenge of building schools. Municipalities were also drawn into the expansion and rebuilding fray by a generous state assistance program. But the biggest reason behind the growing waiting list is demand, said Department of Education spokeswoman Heidi Perlman. There was a school construction boom statewide in the early 1950s. And today's problem is a simple one: many of those schools now need to be replaced.

"The majority of schools were built after World War II, and schools have a life span, they're not eternal," she said. "A lot of these schools built at the same time are suddenly too small, or starting to fall apart. Technology has forced a lot of schools to seek expansion, add computer rooms. They need to be up to code, be handicapped accessible, install elevators."

Local proponents of less than 50 projects were in the line for funding in 1996. Now the list is more than 300 projects long.

Forced by budget realities to choose between continuing to build schools at an accelerated pace and paying for teachers and MCAS assistance, the Swift administration chose the latter, and slowed growth in school building assistance. The House and Senate will make their proposals final in the spring, and are being heavily lobbied by communities with projects pending or on waiting lists. There are many of those.

For now, communities are trying to adapt to the sudden funding changes. That means lobbying the Legislature, preparing budget amendments, authorizing more short-term borrowing and hoping that the economy, and as a result state government's fiscal picture, turns around.

Officials from Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Pembroke and Scituate recently attended a Board of Education meeting in Malden to express their frustration and charge the state with breaking funding promises. The board, citing the new fiscal pressures, said its hands are tied, at least for now.

Jerry Wasserman, president of the Suburban Coalition, said town leaders want state officials to know times are tough locally, where most citizens directly receive government services. "When you balance the budget on the back of communities, it's a double hit," he said. "Towns have their own revenue drop and when the state cuts back, you're borrowing from one town's pocket to put money in the other."

Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, vice-chairman of the House Long-Term Debt Committee, said the Department of Education's School Building Assistance Bureau has overextended itself in promising funding. Hynes is recommending a moratorium on new projects until the current waiting list is addressed. Antonioni said the state has a role to play in making borrowing conditions more attractive for cities and towns in need of money for school construction projects. One bill supported by dozens of members in the House, was filed by Rep. William Galvin, D-Canton, and would extend short-term borrowing privileges for school construction projects from five to seven years.

"There are a lot of projects down the pipeline that if they can't get into the five-year plan these projects may not actually go through," Galvin said about the bill. One project in danger, he said, is Canton's planned $38 million renovation of its high school. To make matters worse, he said the state is threatening to take away the school's accreditation because of its poor condition.

But Wulfson said Galvin's bill would cost the state more money in the long run. He said an extended period of borrowing will result in additional interest costs that the state would be required to pick up.

Larkin is hesitant to embrace Galvin's bill, instead calling for an overhaul of eligibility rules that dictate which projects receive state funding. He favors projects that focus on renovating existing buildings rather than constructing new ones. Antonioni said Galvin's bill could be "part of a solution" and also suggested allowing towns to pool their money in order to secure lower interest rates.

The state presently picks up between 50 and 90 percent of total construction costs, depending on the school district's financial situation, said Wulfson. Changes that went into effect this year favor projects in low-income school districts or that meet certain criteria such as reuse of existing buildings and energy efficiency designs. As a result, Wulfson said program managers saw a big increase in the number of new applications as cities and towns tried to slide onto the funding list under the old regulations.

OK – I'm eating plenty of crow

MY VIEW

EVAN SCHIFF

Let me tell you, crow has never tasted this good.

In last week's column I wrote about how I was going to root for the Pats but my heart wasn't going to be in it. Boy, was I naïve.

I watched the game on Landsdowne Street, the epicenter of Boston's sports world. I watched it on a movie screen along with hundreds of other raging football fans. It was the best football game I have ever seen in my life and in my five years living in the city it was one of the best nights I've ever experienced. I've never felt an energy quite like the one that immersed the bar as the football floated straight and true through the goalposts. It was incredible.

I also watched the game with a Rams fan which made the evening even more loopy. She, yes she, was screaming for her team through hell and high water and we definitely became the dreaded table-that-everyone-wanted-to-beat-up. I actually had to silently signal to other tables that alas, there was nothing I could do, I was an adopted New Englander and rooting for the Pats, but there was no controlling this fanatic.

When the Rams tied the game with a little less than two minutes to play the only sound in the room was coming from the mouth of the girl to my right. Let me tell you how uncomfortable that situation was. I stared at the sea of Coronas that littered our table and pretended not to be paying attention.

I prayed to the football gods to redeem this city, let them win I thought, and then I finally understood. It wasn't about the statistics, or who had more all stars, but this city needed to feel vindicated for its years of undying support. It was a release, a cathartic moment described by some as the best moment is Boston sports history.

But let me tell you, the football game was nothing compared to the scene afterwards.

But let me tell you, the football game was nothing compared to the scene afterwards.

Let's just say on my things-to-do-before-I-die list I can now cross off getting on top of an MBTA bus with 40 other people wildly chanting 'Go Pats' and 'U.S.A.'

While I didn't hang shirtless from light signals as some other people, I did partake in the mass confusion that enveloped Kenmore Square for hours after the game. I'm still hung over.

The hordes of people that descended on Kenmore were on the verge of a violent riot all night yet they never crossed that precarious line. While cars were jumped on and toilet paper and fireworks showered the crowd, no one was hurt and I never felt in danger.

Strangers hugged one another and there was literally dancing in the streets as the police seemed to be enjoying the scene as much as the people.

I can't believe I ever doubted the excitement I would feel being able to participate in such a spectacle. And while I didn't go to the parade on Tuesday, (I'm saving my first parade for when Philly wins a championship), I did support the team.

I cheered when the Rams made a mistake, which probably hurt me in the long run with my lady friend, and bought rounds for everyone at the table when the Pats scored.

And though the bill for the four of us at the end of the night teetered on the $200 mark it was money well drunk, I mean spent.

So congratulations to the Patriots, a team that truly embodied the spirit of sport and the teamwork that's necessary to reach the next level. It should be a reinforcement of the idea that collective minds and actions are more powerful than those formulated by individuals.

So please excuse me while I take this last bite of crow.

'Big Dig' sports fans

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Now that we have the Patriots safely tucked away for the summer and the Red Sox in the capable hands of perky Katie Couric's boyfriend, we can turn our attention to another favorite Boston sport.

The Big Dig, of course.

The $14.5 billion project has become such an integral part of our social fabric that the discovery of three new flaws in the most expensive project since Pharaoh built the pyramids was consigned to an inside page in the Boston papers with the comics.

Who cares if the fire alarms in the Ted Williams tunnel don't work properly or several stretches of concrete overlay is substandard or that brand new blue paint is peeling on the lampposts? Repair costs, we are assured, won't exceed a million bucks.

What's a million dollars when all you have to do to get it is raise the tolls on the Mass Turnpike, which you're still paying, if I recall right, some 30 years after they were supposed to be eliminated when the bonds sold to build it were paid?

It's hard to believe that they've been digging away — and spending money — on the Big Dig since 1984. That's 18 years, which means that a kid born when the first shovelful was turned can now vote for the perpetrators.

It was estimated to cost a modest $2.3 billion and the Feds, who apparently had never done business with Massachusetts before and didn't know what they were getting into, promised to pick up 90 per cent of the tab

Now that tab is up to $14.5 billion and the Feds, who seemed to have learned their lesson well, have not only trimmed their contribution by 59 per cent but have slapped an $8.5 billion cap on what they are willing to spend.

And, oh, yes, their Securities Exchange Commission has been turned loose to graze in the Big Dog books to see why a $1.4 billion cost overrun was left out of the December, 1999, prospectus that was sent to potential investors.

Boy, it's a good thing we have those Mass Turnpike tolls to fall back on. Isn't it? They're expected to produce a badly needed $2 billion to help us pay for it. And, best of all, the toll hike is only temporary — isn't it?

But it's all over now. Just the other day, the final contract worth $179.4 million was awarded for a series of connections between the tunnel and the Turnpike and Expressway.

Only someone who learned to entertain negative thoughts when the subjects of Bay State politicians and money are mentioned in the same sentence would recall an earlier $378 million contract for a short tunnel extension underwent 950 change orders worth an extra $260 million.

But, cheer up. The Big Dig is only 18 years old but it already has produced some collateral goodies.

Two books have been written about the project — "The Big Dig," and "The Big Dig at Night." Brigham's, the ice cream folks, have concocted a Big Dig Ice Cream made up of chocolate chips, brownies and caramel.

And I'm told there is a Big Dig bicycle, which some people think is overpriced at $2,000 — which is why they call it the Big Dig, I suppose.

Air transportation strategy discussed

Rep. Garrett J. Bradley along with members of the Massachusetts Legislative Caucus on Air Transportation to discuss the state of air transportation in the Commonwealth and to map out strategy for the coming year. Formed to promote sensible, long-term air transportation policy in the Commonwealth, the Caucus has also taken a firm stance in opposition to proposed expansion of Logan Airport. In place of a plan that would ultimately increase traffic and noise at Logan, Caucus members have sought to find alternative methods of handling air traffic demand including increased use of regional airports and better traffic management strategies at Logan.

Reacting in part to published reports stating that the Massachusetts Port Authority (Massport) would continue to pursue its expansion proposals by filing a judicial motion to remove an injunction preventing construction at Logan, the members of the Caucus agreed to renew their efforts against expansion.

"We should be focusing available dollars on security rather than delay reduction," Bradley said. "Given recent events, protection of air travelers takes a higher priority than speedy arrivals and departures."

In addition to renewing anti-expansion efforts, Caucus members also offered comments to Executive Office of Environmental Affairs Secretary Robert A. Durand relative to Logan Airport's 2000 Environmental Data Report (EDR). The EDR evaluates and reports on environmental conditions at Logan. Chief among the points raised in the Caucus' comments, members admonished Massport for failing to address comments made in reference to previous years reports particularly in the area of soundproofing.

Cost to bury utility lines

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to clarify a few items regarding the initiative proposed by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation to bury the overhead utility lines in the Village and Harbor areas of the community.

The Village initiative recommends the conversion of all overhead wires to underground service in the following village locations: Ripley Road & Depot Court —from the Post Office to the corner of South Main Street at the Community Center; South Main Street — from the Community Center to the Red Lion Inn; Elm Street – from Cohasset Hardware to Stephen's Lane; Brook Street; and the rear parking area.

The CRC, in conjunction with Martin Associates, Mass. Electric, Verizon, and AT&T Broadband have finalized designs and cost estimates for the Village project. Though estimates are being constantly refined, if the project is undertaken in conjunction with scheduled village improvements it will cost the community approximately $900,000. Detailed information on design and cost estimates for the Harbor area should be completed by the end of February for community review.

At the request of the CRC, the Planning Board has agreed to sponsor a warrant article at the Spring Annual Town Meeting which will ask voters to approve a 2 percent short-term utility surcharge on their monthly phone and electric bills, and an approximately 90-cents monthly surcharge on to their AT&T Broadband bill for the next six years to pay for the village project. AT&T Broadband will charge a fixed rate per subscriber because they have to average payments based on the specific contract period they have with the town.

According to figures provided by the local utilities the average Cohasset resident monthly Verizon bill is $41.71 and the average monthly Mass. Electric bill is about $125. Two percent of each of these average bills equates to an average surcharge of 84 cents a month/$10.08 a year for Verizon and $2.50 a month/$30.00 a year for Mass. Electric. Adding these figures to 90 cents a month /$10.80 a year increase on an AT&T Broadband bill gives a total average surcharge of $4.24 a month, or $50.88 a year per resident household for all utilities. Since everyone's personal utility usage varies, and the state mandates a fixed 2 percent rate for everyone (similar to how property tax rates are administered), the individual burden on each household will be different over the next six years to complete the village area.

The CRC is very sensitive to the current state of municipal finances, and though this may not be the best time to ask residents and businesses to agree to another expense, it is the only time the conversion work can be combined with other planned municipal projects for a cost effective result. Incorporating the underground utility work in unison with excavation work associated with the restoration of the MBTA Greenbush line project; James Brook Flood Control project; and the reconstruction of existing village streets and sidewalks will save the town approximately $500,000 on the utility conversion work, as opposed to having the work completed independent of these projects.

Digging the necessary trenches and installing the required conduits in unison with the excavation and construction work required to complete the above mentioned projects is the most cost effective and least disruptive way to complete the work. If the overhead utility lines are not buried now in unison with these other projects, it likely will never be done. It would be fiscally irresponsible and negligent planning on the part of the CRC not to raise these options to the community now, for it does not make fiscal or planning sense to recommend that the community undertake this project at a later date.

Not only is the timing of this initiative important, it is a critical component to the infrastructure and streetscape improvement program. Removing the utility poles will provide more flexibility for sidewalk, parking and roadway layouts, creating safer conditions for walkers, bikers and vehicle access; it will reduce power outages by protecting the lines from future storm damage; and it will aesthetically improve and preserve the historic character of the downtown environment.

The community has already endorsed an aesthetic and safety improvement initiative that will earmark over $2 million in grant money to install new sidewalks, parking delineations, road paving, tree and flower planting and new decorative light fixtures throughout the village. Though these improvements will make a positive impact on the village environment, their value will be diminished if the visual clutter of the crooked wooden poles and crisscrossing wires maintain their mark and disruption on the village landscape.

HEALTH NOTES

Buckling up saves kids' lives

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has just issued its clearest and most effective guidance on when to use child restraints, booster seats, etc.

As a part of the town's activities, we are reminding parents and those who care for them in Cohasset that all children should be placed in child safety seats, booster seats or seat belts-every time they ride in a car or truck. Great progress has been made in increasing the use of child safety seats and booster seats, which has decreased deaths among children in car and truck crashes, but much more remains to be done.

Children 12 and younger should be buckled up in the back seat. The front seat is a more dangerous spot. Front air bags deployed in even minor fender-benders have seriously hurt and even killed some children. When placing a child safety seat or booster seat in your car or truck, be sure to read the instructions so you install and use the seat correctly. Also, look at your vehicle's owner's manual to see what it says about installing and using child safety seats and booster seats.

- Children, as they grow, should progress through three types of child safety seats before using the seat belt alone: from rear-facing seats to forward-facing seats to booster seats.
- Infants must always be placed in rear-facing seats until they are at least one year old and 20 pounds.
- Children between 20 and 40 pounds should be placed in forward-facing safety seats.
- When your child outgrows his or her forward-facing safety seat, use a booster seat until your child is at least 8 years old or over 4-feet 9-inches tall. All children who have outgrown child safety seats should be properly restrained in booster seats until they are at least eight years old, unless they are 4 feet 9-inches tall.

Seat belts alone are made for adults. A booster seat raises a child up so the seat belt fits. This will prevent your child from being thrown from the car, or thrown around inside it, during a crash. Children who have outgrown booster seats should use seat belts.

Child safety seats reduce fatal injury by 71 percent for infants and by 54 percent for toddlers (1-4 years old) in passenger cars.

Research cites that child safety seat use plummets after age 3. In one study, by the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, one-half of 3 to 8 year-old children were not being placed in child safety or booster seats where most of them belong. Small children (aged 2 to 5) who are placed in seat belts rather than child safety seats or booster seats are 3.5 times more likely to be significantly injured in a crash. They are four times more likely to receive a significant head injury. More than half (56 percent) of all children under 15 years old killed in car crashes in 2000 were completely unrestrained. Unrestrained children are three times more likely to be injured than those who are restrained.

Motor vehicle crashes are the leading cause of death for children ages four to 14. Child safety seats reduce fatal injury by 71 percent for infants and by 54 percent for toddlers (1-4 years old) in passenger cars. For infants and toddlers in light trucks, the seats reduce fatal injury by 58 percent and 59 percent, respectively. Traffic crashes have psychological as well as physical repercussions. A study in the journal Pediatrics found that 25 percent of children suffering traffic-related injuries were diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder, as were 15 percent of their parents. This is a rate similar to that found among children exposed to violence.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Harbor area renewal

TO THE EDITOR:

One of our selectmen recommends public hearings (and a paid consultant) to find out what people want to do about harbor area revitalization.

Well, what a lot of people would like is less petty insinuations about the motivation of CRC and its backers, and more recognition that preservation and improvement benefits all of us, not just tourists and harbor businesses. Judging by the outrageous statements made by members of the "Friends of Cohasset Harbor," the town doesn't need any enemies!

Why are the selectmen listening to them, instead of to the many good citizens who have attended the workshops, and to the townspeople with no business interest who have contributed generously to the CRC project? Contrary to statements by the "Friends", the CRC has been trying to determine what the people want. Rather than try to distill a mishmash of unfocused ideas, they try to focus discussion productively by presenting sketches prepared by experienced planners. However much these preliminary ideas are reworked, truncated, expanded etc. by discussion at the workshops, the end result is always subject to review and approval by the appropriate town authorities, and by town meeting if taxpayer funds are involved.

I can't see that public hearings conducted by another consultant is going to improve on this process, and it certainly won't eliminate small-minded sniping at the idea of renewal.

Fence dispute

TO THE EDITOR

I was the realtor for the transaction at 356 Atlantic Avenue.

The site of the Gropius House was determined by Gropius to have unobstructed ocean views. There never was doubt about the property line. The house is unusual and it is historic. The fence as proposed is in keeping with the architecture.

Sometimes disagreements between neighbors get out of hand, and this seems like one of them.

Where local legislators stand on the Clean Elections law

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Nearly 65 percent of Cohasset voters in 1998 backed the ballot question that set the stage for the Clean Elections Law to allow taxpayer dollars to pay for political campaigns for state office.

But whether the campaign finance reform law, which was headed for another round in court this week will have an effect on the fall 2002 elections is anybody's guess. The state Supreme Judicial Court, which ruled late last month the legislature is in violation of the state Constitution because it has not funded the measure, was slated to hear arguments about how to remedy that issue today (Thursday).

Cohasset voted 2048-1117 to back the initiative petition at the ballot box more than three years ago. Voters across the state approved Clean Elections by about the same margin.

Cohasset's representatives on Beacon Hill — State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth — have voted to support the law that was supposed to take effect last March, according to David Donnelly, director of Mass. Voters for Clean Elections.

But the majority of their colleagues, specifically in the House of Representatives, has refused to fully fund the law, forcing the court showdown that could result in delaying the November election. Secretary of State William F. Galvin has said nomination papers for all offices would be on hold until the court decision is final.

The thrust behind Clean Elections is to level the playing field by reducing the role of big money in politics resulting in more candidates running for office.

Under the measure, candidates for state office that agree to certain spending and contribution limits can qualify for a set amount of public money.

If the 2000 elections are a gauge here on the South Shore, then the cost of running a campaign can be exorbitant — a factor, which Clean Elections proponents say keeps many potential candidates from running.

The races for the Third Plymouth District seat (Hingham, Hull and Cohasset), now held by Bradley, and Hedlund's Plymouth & Norfolk seat were two of the most expensive in the state in 2000, according to the state Office of Campaign and Political Finance. Hedlund's eight-town district stretches from Weymouth to Duxbury.

The four contenders in Bradley's race, which included a Democratic primary, vied for the seat being vacated by Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset and spent a total of $234,231 — $70,000 more than any other contest for state representative that year. Bradley was the top spender of the four with $126,479.

Hedlund's senate race was the second most expensive senate contest that year with a total of $357,158 spent among three candidates. James Cantwell, a Weymouth Democrat, spent the most at nearly $140,000 but he faced a tough primary challenge from Ted LeClair of Marshfield, who spent $103,000. Hedlund, the incumbent, who was unopposed in the primary, spent a total of $114,000.

At the other end of the spectrum long-time state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, of the Fourth Plymouth District (Marshfield and Scituate) raised $15,600 and spent $13,661 in his 2000 campaign which was still ten times more than what his challenger, Republican Ronald B. Wheatley of Scituate spent. Wheatley raised just over $1500 and spend about $1300. It's impossible to say if Clean Elections funding would have had an impact on that race.

Candidates, who opt into Clean Elections, have to agree to certain fund-raising guidelines and spending limits. Under the law, the spending limit for candidates for state representative is $30,000 and state senator, $90,000. Clean Elections candidates could spend 60 percent of the specified limit in the primary and 40 percent in the general election.

Although the law isn't perfect, Hedlund said he would continue to support it because the voters sent Beacon Hill a message.

"I am less a supporter of the Clean Elections Law and more a supporter of the integrity of the initiative petition process," he said. Hedlund explained the law is flawed and cited reporting requirements as "incredibly onerous."

"I wholeheartedly embrace the goal of Clean Elections," he said. "I agree the system needs a major overhaul but there are other avenues we could take first to prevent special interests such as prohibiting lobbyist money rather than a drastic, complicated ballot question."

Nevertheless, Hedlund said he has not changed his position and would not vote to repeal the law.

The legislature has $23 million set aside for Clean Elections, according to Donnelly of Mass. Voters. He estimates Clean Elections candidates in the upcoming election would cost about $35 million. Donnelly dismisses arguments that taxpayer funding of Clean Elections is too expensive.

"It's less than 1/2 of 1/10 of 1 percent of the state budget a year," he said. "That's not a lot of money in the overall scheme of things."

Hedlund expects the Legislature to release the funds, which have already been appropriated, for statewide candidates this year and to delay implementation of Clean Elections for the legislative candidates. Hedlund considered running as a Clean Elections candidate in 2002 but decided against it six months ago when it looked like the legislature would not fund the measure.

"I made the decision to gear up and raise money under the old system," he said.

Garrett Bradley campaigns for election to the Third Plymouth District seat on Election Day in November 2000.

Rep. Bradley says it's time for the legislature to put individual opinions aside and fund the law.

"What the SJC has said is 'repeal it or fund it' and we should fund it," Bradley said, adding that doing so would avert a constitutional crisis. Bradley supports the law although he agrees with Hedlund that it's not perfect.

"The voters have spoken that they want change in the way elections are run," he said.

At this point Bradley would not run as a Clean Elections candidate but would not rule out doing so in the future.

"I want to see it work through a full election cycle first," he said, noting participation is voluntary. "The law make work well in theory but in practice it may not."

Nevertheless, he thinks Clean Elections would get more people to run for office.

"Most people whom I talk to that want to get into politics detest fundraising," he said. "And some of those people would make very good legislators but they're turned off by having to raise money."

However the jury is still out on what the courts and legislature will ultimately do. Attorney General Thomas Reilly, who is representing the legislature in the matter, has argued the legislature does not have to follow the court ruling.

"It's a separation of powers issue," Hedlund said. "The feeling among the leadership is the (legislature) may not have to respond to the courts."

How Clean Elections money could be spent

Office	Spending Limit	Private Contribution Limit	Clean Election Funds
State Representative	$30,000	$6,000	$24,000
State Senator	$90,000	$18,000	$72,000
Governor's Council	$40,000	$8,000	$32,000
Secretary of State & Auditor	$250,000	$50,000	$200,000
Attorney General & Treasurer	$750,000	$150,000	$600,000
Lt. Governor	$750,000	$112,000	$638,000
Governor	$3,000,000	$450,000	$2,550,000

A snapshot of the Clean Elections Law

The Clean Elections Law allows candidates who agree to fixed spending limits and $100 contribution limits to receive a set amount of public money for the primary and general elections.

The candidates must demonstrate their viability by collecting a number of individual contributions of between $5 and $100 from voters over several months. (House candidates, for example, must collect 200 individual contributions from voters in their district over 4-1/2 months).

Candidates are eligible to receive 85 percent of their total spending limit in public money if they are running for governor or lieutenant governor, and 80 percent if they are running for any other state office.

Participants who get outspent by their opponents can receive matching funds up to twice their original spending limit to keep pace with a candidate who is spending a lot.

The Clean Elections Law eliminates unlimited transfers of "soft money" from national parties to state parties.

The Clean Elections Law requires electronic disclosure of all campaign contributions to candidates and political committees.

Participation is voluntary. Candidates who choose not to participate receive no public money.

Similar systems are in place in Maine, Arizona and Vermont.

League introduces new director

kept quite busy. He has visited with more than 50 agencies and support groups that provide social services in an effort to introduce himself. His aim is to collaborate with the different groups to provide better services.

"Right now, my job involves brainstorming with other agencies to enhance the community mindset," he said.

Ivas, who lives in Scituate, became a licensed clinical social worker in 1995. He became interested with the field when he had a mid-life change and was less interested in money and sought something more meaningful.

"The best part of this job is knowing at the end of the day that something I did perhaps helped someone in a small way," he said.

Ivas lived on Nantucket for more than 15 years but when second child was born, he needed a change of scenery. He moved off the island in 1996 and worked as a therapist for Framingham State College.

When he saw the job opening in Cohasset, he jumped at it.

"There's a lot of potential here," he said. "While we're on a limited budget, we really have no restraints it's a great situation."

Along with initiating youth programs, such as getting a counselor to talk to students before prom night about substance abuse, and having a drinking and driving informational session with the teens, Ivas prides himself in creating support groups.

One group that is close to Ivas' heart is an oncology support group for men whose wives have cancer. Ivas' wife is a breast cancer survivor and he knows the turbulent times he went through when his wife was ill and wanted to help others in his position.

"Anybody I ever talked to who knew a man whose wife had cancer said they thought a support group would be a wonderful idea," he said. "There wasn't an outline for a program so I wrote one up."

While designing programs is one thing, getting people to attend them is another.

Ivas said one of the most difficult parts of his job will be to convince people that joining a support group is not a sign of weakness. He will try to overcome the stigma associated with social services by offering broader programs with more of an educational emphasis so the league can try and help through education.

"We need to get people to realize that asking for help is the first step," he said.

Other groups Ivas would like to see created is one for parents of troubled teens and another for new mothers.

Also on the forefront Ivas' agenda is reviving the "New Friends" program. The program asks volunteers to contribute one hour a week to visiting elderly residents of the area who could be struggling with isolation. The Social Service League is collaborating with Cohasset Elder Affairs in a hope to re-establish this program. He said people don't realize how much they have in common with elders until they visit with them.

"Older people tend to be pushed aside in our society and it's unfortunate," he said. "They have so much to offer."

The Social Service League, which was established in 1912, is a non-profit community service agency managed by a Board of Directors and serves Cohasset along with its neighboring towns. The league supports Meals on Wheels and provides the services of a licensed social worker, among other programs.

N. Cohasset could be put on town water private company.

"If we are able to sell the water we may not have to raise the rates," McNabb said Tuesday night. "We are trying to look far ahead in our fiscal future because right now, we're in great shape."

McNabb said the town has water to spare even when it incorporates potential new growth and acquiring North Cohasset into the equation. Cohasset, whose water supply includes the Aaron River Reservoir and Lily Pond, uses an average of 680,000 gallons a day. The system has a "safe yield" of 3.5 million gallons a day. Safe yield is the amount of water that can be withdrawn without depleting the supply. The town's maximum use under the highest demand is 1.7 million gallons a day — so the water department still has a lot of leeway, McNabb said.

One of the water department Town Meeting articles asks authorization to sell water to Mass-American for 20 years and to set the rate structure for that sale. The rate would include the cost of the treated water and some maintenance of the plant and distribution system. The article also asks for the Water Department to be able to make related purchase or acquisition of "physical assets and related construction," which would authorize the town to acquire the North Cohasset water customers.

"No decision on that has been made by anyone," McNabb said, adding North Cohasset is on the table because those residents are looking for rate relief.

"And we're the Cohasset Water Commission that is elected by all the citizens of Cohasset," he said in an earlier interview.

Selectman Tom Callahan thought incorporating North Cohasset into the system would be beneficial to the town.

"I think we should make a concerted effort to get North Cohasset involved," he said.

The other articles would resolve permitting and zoning issues with the state, change the law amended in 1998 that doesn't Cohasset to sell water on a wholesale basis, and appropriate $6 million in capital improvements — which could be paid for through the proceeds of the sale to Mass-American.

"If we get enough out of Hingham we may not have to touch the rates," McNabb said. He declined to comment on what the town might charge Mass-American for the water, saying it was part of negations. The Water Department meets with Mass-American on Feb. 21.

McNabb is optimistic Town Meeting will support the water sale.

"If the revenue is OK and people are comfortable with projections of our water use — then there won't be much of a problem," he said. Mass-American could connect through a 2,000-foot-long pipe line along Rt. 3A from the new Cohasset water tank to Cohasset Knoll, a nursing home on the town line. Another option is connecting at the base of Forest Avenue at Jerusalem Road.

Cohasset schools are part of a high-tech world

Osgood School computer ready as part of the construction plans. That was followed in 1999-2000 with the installation of hardware and software, computer labs, computer upgrades, Internet access and updating K-12 curriculum so it was in-line with state guidelines.

Over the past two years, TV monitors have been installed in all classrooms at Deer Hill, and system-wide there are computers in every classroom, upgraded software and more staff development.

The schools' technology staff includes Cisneros, tech teachers at Deer Hill and the middle-high school, a tech aide at Osgood and school librarians.

Marjorie Murphy, the librarian/media specialist at Deer Hill, says the computer has changed the library.

"For one thing the card catalogs are gone," she said. Murphy said once the school building projects are complete, the three school libraries will be "on line" with one another and can conduct inter-school loans.

"If a Deer Hill class is studying the Aztecs, we can see what Osgood and the middle-high school libraries have available," she said.

Cisneros is a natural to head the technology department because got hooked on computers and the Internet long before the rest of us. He quickly discovered he could use the skill to his advantage when presenting proposals to the School Committee or completing class projects.

"I created a Web page on air quality," Cisneros recalls about a project in the early 90s. "We did testing in the school over several years and got so many things changed such as carpeting and new windows. Things also got fixed."

The effort won an award from the Norfolk County Chapter of the American Lung Association and was also recognized by the Eisenhower Institute for Math and Science.

Nowadays that same anatomy lesson, in which Cisneros used a skeleton, could be enhanced with a video on the TV screen with a talking skeleton.

Technology has also provided unlimited access to a range of lesson plans and curriculum.

"There's endless opportunities on how to approach subjects that will reach more children," Cisneros says.

Eventually teachers' grade books will be on line and kept constantly up-to-date and attendance will be something parents can check on from home.

But Supt. Malvey said while the school system has made technology a priority, it is still used in context of "quality hard-cover resources and quality instruction."

"Technology by itself, won't do the trick," he said.

Library gets grant early

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, also welcomed the news.

"The timing of this is excellent," he said. "It's likely funding could be scaled back in the future and now we know Cohasset will not be affected by that."

By receiving the grant earlier than anticipated, the library trustees can put the interest money to good use. They will now be able to spread $180,000 — or about $60,000 a year for three years — around to different areas rather than using the money to pay the interest.

"We're looking at enhancing the audio-visual materials, landscaping, lighting fixtures and adding additional computers," Towle said. "This is what we always hoped would happen."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it is fortunate the money has been awarded because the library construction is already underway.

"The financial plan presented by the library trustees has come to fruition," he said. "We can now say that there will not be any additional cost to the taxpayers for the construction of this building."

The final issue with paying for the new library being constructed at the old Osgood School is the sale of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library building.

"It's likely funding could be scaled back in the future and now we know Cohasset will not be affected by that."

— State Sen. Robert Hedlund

Haddad told selectmen Tuesday he will raise the minimum bid for the building to $900,000 (up from $700,00). He said this is to make sure the cost of library construction won't affect the tax base. He also thinks the building is worth more than $700,000 — the amount of money the town is counting on to help pay for the new library.

New light could prevent crashes

McCourt added that creating a turning lane may produce more problems than it fixes. He explained with a turning lane, the tendency is to use the left-turning lane as a passing lane if no one is occupying it. This causes moving traffic violations that police would have to monitor.

Instead of a turning lane, McCourt suggested a five-tiered light fixture. This would include the standard red, yellow and green along with a green and yellow turning signal. The light would work on a lead/lag system where the northbound lane receives a green bulb and green turning signal while the southbound lane remains red. After a certain amount of time passes, both directions would have a green light. Then, the northbound lane would see a red light while the southbound lane continued with its green light and the green arrow.

Sullivan was lukewarm on the idea.

"This doesn't necessarily alleviate the problem, but it seems that it may help to control it," he said.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said he thought the five tiered light fixture may work.

"I think it's worth a try," he said. "We need to do something to fix this intersection."

McCourt said the process will take a few months because the MassHighway Department needs to determine if the 'arm' of the light fixture can support the added weight of the heavier five tiered light head.

"If it is determined that the change is feasible, we will seriously entertain the idea," he said.

McCourt visited with the town because a recent study conducted by the Boston Metropolitan Planning Organization showed from 1997-1999, there were 29 accidents at the intersection. This is an average of 9.7 a year or 1.28 per million vehicles, well above the state average of .89 per million vehicles for a signalized intersection.

However, McCourt pointed out that at least six of the accidents occurred when vehicles turned out of the gas station, which is not exactly at the Beechwood, Route 3A juncture. He said with these six accidents taken out of the study, the intersection is well with in the state's limits for safety.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, thanked McCourt for visiting with town and urged the two sides to come to a resolution.

"We've got to come up with a solution at that intersection," he said.

Artist of the month

Scituate resident, Monice Morenz, is this month's artist on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Morenz graduated from the School of the Museum of Fine Arts (in affiliation with Tufts University with a BFA and was awarded a masters of education from Tufts. She has taught in the Boston area, Connecticut and Bermuda. Her major juried exhibitions, all in Connecticut, include "Works on Paper" at the Washington Art Association gallery, "Passages" at the Art Guild in Farmington and "Monice Morenz" at the Samuel Collins Gallery in Canton. Morenz is also an active member of the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset.

The art on display at the library are collages which are assemblages of papers or scraps of found materials, newspapers, books or fabrics. Morenz states, "Collage is a liberating, spontaneous and direct way to work with color and design without first drawing an image.

World's End by Monice Morenz

The theme or subject of the piece is discovered during the selection of materials. Collage, a French word for "paste-up," was first used in a style called Cubism by artists such as Pablo Picasso. Picasso used contents from a wastebasket, tobacco wrappers and stamps to create new images. Morenz explains, "The pleasure in making this work was rediscovering pieces of art and materials and giving them new life."

A reception for collage artist Monice Morenz will be held at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sunday, Feb. 10, from noon to 2 p.m. The exhibition will continue at the library until Feb. 26.

The Fine Art Silent Auction and Sale will be held: at Red Parrot Restaurant located at 1 Hull Drive on Nantasket Beach. Plenty of free parking available. For more information, call 1-800-413-1770.

The Hull Artists' Studio Connection, a dynamic South Shore artist organization and cooperative, is a non-profit artists' organization working in cooperation with the Cultural Council.

It's off to the races for selectman seat

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

At least one race in the town's upcoming election is heating up. Roger Q. Hill, 19A Highland Ave., has the necessary 50 signatures to be placed on a ballot and plans to run in a three-way race for two seats on the Board of Selectmen. Incumbents Ronnie McMorris and Fred Koed are both seeking reelection.

Hill declined to comment on why he's decided to throw his hat into the ring.

There is at least one open seat on the Recreation Commission. According to Recreation Department director Jack Worley, David Marks has decided not to run and Lillian Curley is still undecided whether she will seek another term. Worley said the candidate should be interested in the community as a whole, not just sports and kids. The Recreation Commission meets once a month and is a policy setting group.

Time is ticking away for candidates the last day to pick up papers is Feb. 14 and all papers need to be returned by Feb. 19. To be put on the ballot, a candidate must have 50 signatures from registered voters. Annual Town Election will be April 6.

Residents who previously pulled papers include, Glenn Pratt, 482 King St., who plans to run for reelection on the Water Commission. Recreation Commissioner Mary K. Muncey, 377 S. Main St., is looking to serve another term and, Planning Board Chairman Al Moore, hopes to keep his seat and will be running again. Ray Kasperowicz, 172 S. Main St., intends to seek reelection to the Sewer Commission. On the Board of Health, Robin Lawrence intends to seek reelection and Town Clerk Marion Douglas will also be looking to serve another term. The following residents pulled papers earlier in the month indicating their desire to run for office. Jane Pescatore of Lantern Lane plans to run for the open seat on the school committee being vacated by Stephanie Noble, who is not seeking reelection. Mary Granville, 100 Beach St., will seek a seat on the Board of Assessors. Roger Lowe, also of 100 Beach St., plans to run for reelection to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees and, Roger Q. Hill, 17A Highland Ave., intends to run for an open position on the Board of Selectmen.

Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees Sheila Evans and Roger Whitley are looking to serve another term.

Water board seeks grants to protect drinking water quality

The Water Commission has applied for two state grants to help protect drinking water quality: $25,000 for a water quality study of Lily Pond, and $10,000 for technical assistance to evaluate two hazardous waste sites in Cohasset.

"These grants, if we are successful, will help the Water Commission to protect the integrity of our public drinking water supply," said John McNabb, Water Commission chairman. "Lily Pond is our primary source of drinking water supply, and we need to protect it.

"Lily Pond is being choked with weeds, and algae, which impacts water quality," he said. "In the water quality study grant, the Water Commission will conduct a limnological study to evaluate the drainage of nutrients into Lily Pond, propose 'Best Management Practices' to protect the pond from storm-water runoff, and will study the adequacy of the buffer zone around the Pond." If the application is successful, the Water Commission will have to match the $25,000 grant with another $25,000, for a total of $50,000 that will be spent on the project.

"Lily Pond is our primary source of drinking water supply, and we need to protect it."
— John K. McNabb Jr., Water Commission

"In the other grant," said McNabb, "we have applied for a Technical Assistance Grant (TAG) to evaluate two hazardous waste sites: Hingham Annex in Hingham, which is in the Lily Pond watershed, and the former Browns Auto Body, at Depot Court, which is in the watershed for the Ellms Meadow Wellfield. While the Water Commission has an ongoing program to identify and evaluate all potential threats to water quality, this grant will provide $10,000 help us to evaluate and publicize the potential threats from these two sites."

Dan Littauer

After suffering a separated elbow two days before the wrestling season was set to begin, doctors told this Cohasset High senior and star grappler that his high school wrestling days were more than likely over. But Littauer, who finished second at the Div. 3 South Sectionals a year ago, "worked his butt off" (according to coach Torin Sweeney) to get back well ahead of schedule to debut this weekend with a 17-6 win at 152 pounds in Cohasset's upset win over Rockland for the Pilgrim Conference 2 league championship., 39-32. This four point swing provided by Dan was one of several key performances for Cohasset wrestlers on the day.

Cohasset High grapplers shock Rockland to take league title

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset wrestling coach Torin Sweeney confided prior to Saturday's showdown with Rockland for the Pilgrim Conference 2 crown that he really didn't know if his predominantly younger team had enough experience to compete with the perennial powerful Bulldogs.

The reason it seems OK to report this now is because the Cohasset grapplers not only competed with Rockland, they shocked most close observers of the South Shore wrestling scene by topping them, 39-32.

"Everything just broke right for us," said an elated Sweeney, whose Skippers completed a perfect 6-0 season in league competition (12-10 overall). "The match-ups we got were pretty favorable, and we had some guys really come up big with some dramatic performances. We had a lot

Sci-Coh swimmers primed for Sectionals

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Scituate-Cohasset swim team does not have time to worry about their recent losses to non-league power swimming schools. They have more important things on their minds.

The Sci-Cohs did receive back-to-back thumpings at the hands of Sharon and Sandwich, but everyone has really been focusing on the upcoming League Championships and Southeast Sectionals.

"This is what we work towards all season," affirmed second year coach Jamie Kearney. "I know we can surprise some people at both of those meets."

The tiny Sci-Coh squad certainly surprised at least a few of its opponents, taking down both Middleboro and North Quincy in league. They also put in very solid bids at beating such powerhouses as Nauset and Cardinal Spellman, and could have nipped Oliver Ames were it not for team absences.

The Sci-Cohs will send three

Cohasset skaters dismantle Norwell in much awaited SSL rematch

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The debate, if ever there truly was one, is over: the Cohasset High hockey team is The Power in the South Shore League, period.

With a message-sending 10-1 win on Wednesday over second place Norwell, the team that put the lone blemish on their 13-0-1 record, the Skippers seemingly eliminated what little doubt there may have been about them being true contenders for a Div. 3 state title.

Standout Norwell High goalie Ryan O'Shaughnessy was on his game early, thwarting several early Cohasset flurries to keep it a 1-0 game at the end of one.

The Skippers opened it up even more after the break, firing 18 shots on O'Shaughnessy over the second 15 minute frame, and it was all O'Shaughnessy could do to stop 13 of them.

Norwell's Mike McAteer ruined Cohasset goalie Dan Kinchla's bid for a shutout 33 seconds into the third period, making it a 6-1 game, but the Skippers quickly turned that into an afterthought, potting four more goals before the clock mercifully ran out on the Clippers.

To the surprise of no one who's

Gymnasts lock up Sectional bid

Norwell-Cohasset squad wraps up first league championship

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There aren't many people around who remember much about the Cohasset gymnastics team's last trip to the Sectionals back in 1998, a sojourn they will now be repeating thanks to the Pilgrim Conference 2 championship it wrapped up last week. Cohasset High senior Kristin Sheerin is one of those few. She was a member of that team as an eighth grader.

"It's pretty exciting to be going back there as a team," said Sheerin, who has gone on to the state championships as an individual each of the past two years. "We've come together to have a real good season."

Speaking of coming together, this is the first time ever the joint Norwell High-Cohasset High team has gone to Sectionals, the two small schools having joined ranks in 1999.

The Nor-Coh squad clinched the league championship and all of the spoils with a 129.5-101.2 victory over Duxbury last Wednesday, sewing up a perfect 5-0 season in league, and an overall mark of 9-1.

Sheerin likewise completed her perfect season on Wednesday in the all-around competition, making it 10-for-10 as she swept all four events to finish with a total score of 35.3. Her first place scores were 8.7 on the bars, 8.8 on the beam, 8.7 on the vault and a 9.1 in the floor exercise.

Also scoring for the Clippers/Skippers were Cohasset High's Meredith Bixby and Jen Guiney.

Bixby, a junior, was second in both the bars (8.1) and beam (7.7), while Guiney was second on the floor (8.3).

The girls will try to pin down a high seeding for Sectionals with a big showing at the All-League meet at Carver High School on Saturday (12 noon start).

Sheerin also hopes the head-to-head rematch against her best competition this season— Carver's Steven Cudworth, who she beat by just 4/10ths of a point in the all around earlier this season— pushes her to greater heights. She was fighting a nasty head cold at mid-week, but said there was no way she would miss this meet.

"I was sick at last year's league meet too," she said is a raspy voice. "It's just something about this time of year for me."

In past years, the top six teams from both the North and South Sectional

The Lady Skippers played two somewhat encouraging games over the past week.

In one, they outplayed their opponents in the beginning of the game. In the other, they played superior to the opposition at the end. Both games, however, ended the same: with the Lady Skippers on the losing end.

Surging Wave scuttles Skippers

Cohasset boys no match for powerhouse Abington

By T.J. Byrne
CORRESPONDENT

The Abington Green Wave improved their record to 12-2 with an decisive 69–45 win over the visiting Cohasset Skippers (6-11) Tuesday night. With an upcoming showdown versus the league leading Norwell Clippers this Friday night, the Green Wave took it to their opponents this past week much like a prize fighter abuses his sparing partners.

"There is no question about how important this game is for us on Friday," said Abington head coach Don Byron. "They (Norwell) are a very good team, but so are we. The first time we met they were able to wear us down a little bit, but I think we have improved since that game in a lot of areas."

The Green Wave has shown no signs of wearing down since their come from behind road victory over Carver just over a week ago. Following the Carver victory, Abington disposed of Hull 101–37.

Abington now holds second place in the South Shore League alone following Carver's tough 74–73 loss to Norwell Tuesday night. A win at Norwell Friday night will put Abington in great position as the season begins to wind down.

"Our guys understand what a win would mean Friday night," added Byron. "We would still be a game behind Norwell, as well as improving our position and seeding in the tournament when the brackets come out."

Before getting to Norwell, Abington had to play South Shore League foe Cohasse—who, following a successful tournament run a year ago, have fallen on some tough times.

The story of the game was the play of Abington senior forward Tom McSharry. As Abington rolled to a 13 point, 35–22, halftime lead, McSharry was 8-for-9 shooting for 16 points and five rebounds. McSharry, much like the rest of the Green Wave squad, seems to be peaking at just the right time.

"Tom has been playing great," said coach Byron. "He has to be one of the most versatile players in the league right now."

The Skippers had little success against a very tough man-to-man defense applied by the Green Wave. Cohasset's high scorer Chris Bilodeau finished with 13 points.

If there was any question about the outcome of the game, it was quickly answered after the break. Abington opened the second half with a 16–0 run and the Green Wave never looked back. Abington's points came off of their solid defensive play, as they forced five turnovers during that run and held Cohasset scoreless until the 9:37 mark.

McSharry followed his 28 point output against Hull with 27 points and 8 rebounds to finish the game. Mike Carey added 14 points and center Tim Inglis contributed with four points and 10 rebounds.

"We played very well tonight," said Byron. "Everyone on this team is contributing right now. As we get closer to the tournament, we will need everyone."

Matt Bilodeau scored 11 points for the Skippers, while Liam Martin was impressive tossing down nine points in one of his first athletic endeavors since breaking his leg in the season opener for football back in early September.

The debate is over

Cohasset star Greg O'Connell (#8) has been more than a one-way threat this season. Not only does he lead the South Shore League in scoring with 43 points, but he's tops among Cohasset forwards in +/- with a +42.

been keeping an eye on the Cohasset hockey program of late, junior center Greg O'Connell paced the Skipper attack with three goals and three assists, improving his SSL best offensive production to 43 points (20 goals, 23 assists). O'Connell's linemates, wingers John Durkin and Rob Carpenter, also made out in the deal with multi-point totals, while senior defensemen Tim Straughn and Eric Libby continued their all-star caliber campaigns by combining for five points, including a goal apiece.

"The kids were fired up for the rematch with Norwell after what happened the first time around," noted longtime Cohasset coach Dennis Walsh. "That win helps their confidence heading down the stretch and then into the tourney."

For good measure, the Skippers followed this up with a 5-2 win over third place Abington on Friday night at Pilgrim Arena.

Pete Whoriskey, Matt Davis and Durkin each scored in the first to post Cohasset to a 3-zip lead over the visiting Green Wave.

A pretty play by Straughn early in the second frame made it 4-0. The veteran blueliner first did a nice job of keeping the puck in Cohasset's offensive zone on an attempted Abington clear. He then faked a slapper from the point to send a forward flying past him, allowing him to skate in closer where he drew in another defender and slipped a quick pass in to the freed up Tom Anderson in the slot for a quick one-timer.

The Skippers seemed to go on automatic pilot at this point, and that's when that pesky old penalty monster began to once again rare its head. Bad penalties have been an on again-off again problem for the Skippers all season—the worst example of this being the Norwell tie, where they committed the game's last six penalties in the third period, helping the Clippers erase a two goal deficit.

At 5:17 of the second period, the Skippers committed their third penalty of the game. On the ensuing faceoff to the right of Kinchla, the draw went back to defenseman James Tevlin, who quickly fired a wrister through a screen that the Cohasset goalie didn't pick up on until it was too late.

Defenseman Mike Devine gave Cohasset back its four goal cushion with 2:33 left in the second, taking a feed from Whoriskey at the right point and firing off a 40-foot laser beam that beat Abington goalie Bryce Beauregard high.

Apparently unable to stand good fortune, however, another Cohasset player committed a bad penalty just 42 seconds later, and Abington converted on its second power play of the period a mere seven seconds after that, Chris Murphy poking it past Kinchla off of a scramble in front that was created right off the draw.

One might think the Skippers would have learned a lesson from this, but they wound up being whistled for all six penalties called in the third period. Fortunately, Kinchla was able to prevent any further damage, but whatever offensive cohesion there had been for the Skippers early in the game was never recovered—hardly surprising considering the Skippers were down a man for most of the third period.

"Obviously, we need to get away from this pattern of taking bad penalties,," noted Walsh after the game. "We did the same thing against Norwell the first time, and that cost us there. It's a chink in our armor right now.

"I thought some of the calls tonight might have been a little questionable, but not all of them. We did take some bad penalties. That's not the way you want to protect a lead."

Hockey Notes

Skippers a +96

The Skippers have now outscored their opponents by a combined score of 115-19 this season.

Not surprisingly, the physical and talented Straughn tops the list with a remarkable +56. He's followed by fellow blue-liner Libby (+45) and O'Connell (+42).

The road ahead

The Skippers road to an unbeaten regular season contains five more stops, which began with a scheduled meeting last night with SSL rival Hull. This will be followed by Trinity Catholic next Wednesday in Watertown and Randolph next Saturday (Feb. 16, 5:20 at Pilgrim Arena). These are three teams the Skippers beat in first go-rounds by a combined score of 37-0.

The Cohasset skaters can probably look forward to a pretty good test from Scituate on Feb. 18 at Pilgrim (6:30 p.m.). The Sailors (6-7-1) have arguably played one of the toughest schedules of any Div. 3 team in the state, competing in league play against higher division powerhouses Duxbury, Hanover and Hingham, and twice each in non-league play against Div. 2 tourney bound teams Quincy and Marshfield.

The regular season finale against Avon-Holbrook (6-6-2) on Feb. 20 should also prove a nice tune-up for the post-season.

SPORTS NOTES

Cohasset girls hoop Spirit Night

The Cohasset High athletic boosters have scheduled a Spirit Night for tomorrow night's girls basketball game against South Shore League rival Carver.

Any Cohasset student wearing a Cohasset Recreation T-shirt and accompanied by a paying adult will receive free admission.

The junior varsity game is scheduled to begin at 5:00 p.m., with the varsity tip-off slated for 6:30.

Two 'Banner' nights

The Cohasset High Athletic Department will be honoring championship teams from this past year at home basketball games this coming week by hanging banners in the gymnasium commemorating their achievements.

Friday, Feb. 8: Girls Basketball vs. Carver, 6:30 p.m.

* 2001 Girls Tennis Team will be honored for the South Shore League Title and South Sectional Semi-Finalists banners.

Monday, Feb. 11: Boys Basketball vs. Harwich, 6:30 p.m.

Three banners will be raised:

*2001 Boys Lacrosse State Finalists

*2001 Boys Track South Shore League Champions

*2001 Football South Shore League Champions and Super Bowl Semi-Finalists

All team members will receive "free" admission.

Race-by-the-Sea set for April 7

The 26th Cohasset Road Race-by-the-Sea has been scheduled for Sunday, April 7, 2002. The Cohasset Rotary Club will again sponsor the race.

The race is listed on the "Cool Running" Web site calendar (www.coolrunning.com). Information can be obtained on the race website www.cohassetroadrace-bythesea.com.

Applications are in the back of the Rotary Telephone Book for Cohasset. Runners can also register on the website. Applications will be at Curtis Liquors, Nobles, Cohasset Good Sport and other locations at the end of February beginning of March.

Organizers this year intend to use computer chips for timing.

Coaching vacancies

For the spring, 2002 seasons, Cohasset High is seeking a girls lacrosse coach and the Cohasset Middle School is seeking a softball coach. Interested individuals should call Athletic Director Ron Ford at 781-383- 6103.

Meets in Massachussets qualified for the states, but this year the MIAA has created a third section—"Central"—and is allowing only two teams from each of these three sections to advance to states.

"We'd probably need just about a flawless showing at the Sectionals to advance to States," conceded Sheerin. "The new way they're doing it really puts the pressure on us. There are a lot of good teams in our section."

Of course, Sheerin already appears a lock to return to her third consecutive state championships, her average all-around score having gone up this year from the previous two seasons when she qualified—her high score this season an outstanding 36.1. Sheerin finished sixth in the State all-around as a sophomore after going in as the 18th seed out of 20. She went in last winter with a ninth seed, but finished 11th after a fall on the beam.

There in the added inducement for seniors to do well at these state event, as college scouts are likely to attend. The top six seniors at the Massachusetts championships this year will also qualify for a chance to showcase their skills further at a national event next month in Las Vegas.

Ski team continues strong season

Despite the lack of snow locally, a dedicated group of Cohasset High School Ski Team members have been making the twice-weekly trip to Blue Hills to compete in the Bay State League Ski races. Under the coaching of Jack Dane, the team is well positioned to send a group to the State Championships at Berkshire East later this month. Individuals race in both Slalom and Giant Slalom formats to obtain individual and team points.

With four of five races completed, the boy's team has ousted Westwood by a mere 5 points to secure a second place standing. If this holds they will represent Cohasset at the state championships. Senior David Kruger and Sophomore Andrew Busk had been jockeying for the top Cohasset slot, with Andrew Busk leading by 7 points going into Monday night's race. Unfortunately, a skiing injury has sidelined Busk for the remainder of the season. David Kruger came up big Monday night and amassed 21 points, totaling 65 for the season. Senior Captain Connor Avery, Senior Alex Schmidt and Sophomores Ryan Oftshun and Dan Roth are well positioned to contribute additional points and help bring the team to the state meet.

For the girls team, Junior Moira McKenney continually places in the top ranks, earning 90 points overall. Sophomores Jessie Guild and Brenna O'Donnell have both made significant contributions to the team, improving their times with each race and helping the girl's team to move up in the standings.

The Cohasset Ski Team is organized as a club sport, fully funded by the participants. Race results are posted on MBSLE.org.

Sci-Coh swimmers primed for Sectionals

females to compete in individual events at Sectionals, a meet that takes place on Valentine's Day.

Junior Kathryn Noonan, who did not join the team until two weeks into the season, finally clinched her spot at Sectionals against Sandwich last Friday in the 100 backstroke. Needing a 1:14.20 to qualify, Noonan's previous best had been less than a half a second off. On Friday, she broke out, making it easily with a 1:11.56.

"I knew she could do it," said a smiling Kearney after that race. "She is such a competitor."

Freshman Liz Tierney emerged as an outstanding addition to the team, especially in races of more than 100 yards. In her best effort of the season, Tierney qualified for Sectionals in the 200 Individual Medley (two laps of each stroke) with a time of 2:37.31.

Tierney's frosh counterpart Danielle Swain impressed everyone who watched the swim team compete this year, earning a trip to Sectionals in three different events. She qualified in the 200 freestyle early in the season with a time of 2:15.7, then made the 100 freestyle on Monday against Sharon, swimming a1:01.49. The event in which she has the strongest shot of medaling is the 100 breastroke, where her seed time will be 1:20.59.

"I absolutely love the fact that I am gonna have them for three more years after this," noted Kearney of her freshmen phenom trio. That threesome of course also includes Becky Keyes, the Sci-Cohs lone diver this year who also nearly qualified for Sectionals in winning the 500 freestyle on Monday.

Unfortunately, the Sci-Cohs will not be sending any males to Sectionals, possibly a result of the newly lowered necessary seed times to qualify.

Cohasset junior Bryan Bilton put in a very strong bid in the 100 freestyle, knocking five seconds off his best time in the final week of the season. However, his time of 0:56.84 was just over a second off.

This Thursday will be the girls Patriot League/Pilgrim Conference Championships, and Friday will be for the boys.

Cohasset's La'Raine Langford (#24) is unable to keep Norwell's Shauna Eyster from this long rebound as Lindsay Grossman (#44) rushes in to help.

winnable.

The first time these two teams met, junior Heather Peraino sank a 3-pointer with less than five seconds left to give her team a one point lead. But the Lancers answered right back, with Norton senior Larsen Jeweline connecting on a trey to give her team a two point victory, and leaving emotions running very high for the second head-to-head meeting.

Norton showed themselves to be the aggressors early on, snatching a 36-25 halftime lead over the visitors. In the second half, Cohasset found themselves getting much more physical on both ends of the floor, shooting their way back into it.

The Lady Lancers found themselves clinging to a three point lead with four minutes left, but they hit their necessary free throws down the stretch to preserve the win.

Jeweline was again the hero, scoring a game-high 21 points. Right behind her, though, was Cohasset junior Lindsay Grossman, who kept her team in it with a 20 point effort.

"We played fine defense," noted third year coach Ellen Carr, "but we played ragged offense."

Against Abington on Tuesday night, Cohasset did all it could to hang around, but eventually the superior team took control. The Green Wave continued their outstanding season atop the South Shore League, taking a 70-29 decision.

In their previous meeting, Abington had jumped out to a startling 28-4 lead before calling off their tenacious press. In this one, the opening minutes were quite different.

Junior Maura O'Brien won the opening tip, and junior point guard LaRaine Langford scored off an assist from Grossman. After an Abington layup tied the score, O'Brien put one in, and Grossman sank two field goals for an 8-2 lead.

"They made Abington think about what they were doing," said Carr. "I think our kids made a ball-game of it."

The teams traded baskets for three minutes, but Abington did proceed to take over. Forcing nine turnovers in the next five minutes, the Green Wave put together a 16-0 run to open a double digit lead that would stick for the duration of the game.

The Abington girls showed the shooting form that has gotten them to where they are, sinking five consecutive threes in the second half. Senior All-star Brittany Cheney tallied 22 points, despite spending most of the second half on the bench with the big lead.

Abington junior Stephanie Morrissey scored 15 points, including 7-of-8 from the foul line. Grossman led her team with 10 points, and O'Brien followed with eight.

The Lady Skippers have their final home game of the season on Friday versus Carver. There will be a pre-game recognition of the seniors, and anyone wearing a Recreation t-shirt pays no admission.

Wrestlers scrap their way back of guys avoid getting pinned in key match-ups, and then a few others came away with huge pins for us. It sounds good on paper, but the reality was even better."

Freshman Joey Kehoe sewed up the match in the second to final bout of the day in the 112-pound division with a dramatic third period pin of Rockland's Leo Mahoney—this after escaping himself three times from near pins.

This clinching effort followed four consecutive pins for Cohasset in the heaviest weight divisions—slapped on by Mike Casey at 171 pounds, Cosimo Cambi at 189, Matt Baroudi at 215 and John Hussey at heavyweight—that propelled the Skippers from a 22-9 deficit in to a 33-22 lead.

The match also featured the 2001-'02 debut of team captain Dan Littauer, who separated his elbow a few days prior to the season opener back in December. Although some rust was evident, the defending Sectional runner-up had little trouble with his Rockland counterpart at 152, topping him 17-6 for the four-point Major Win.

Cohasset wrestlers actually lost the first three bouts of the match to legitimate state contenders David Laramie (125 pounds), Zach Gorman (130) and Frank Sforza (135), a three-time state champ—but not by nearly as many points as Sweeney feared they might.

Cohasset sophomore Phil Strazzulla, who finished fourth in sectionals last year, surrendered only four points to Laramie, who bumped up from the 119-pound division for this match-up. The 4-0 loss awarded Rockland just three points to open the match.

Freshman Bill Carbone gave the more experienced Gorman something to think about at 130 before getting turned over on his back in the second period for the six point pin.

Rockland's lead grew to 13-0 when Sforza bested Cohasset junior standout Terry Baroudi at 135, 14-4. However, Baroudi did all that Sweeney could have expected against the three-time state champ, holding him to a major win for four points rather than the six points awarded for a pin.

"We told Terry to lock him up whenever he could, and just stay away from dangerous moves, and he did a great job of that," lauded Sweeney. "Not giving up those two extra points was huge for us."

Sophomore Ian Hickey finally got Cohasset on the board with a Tech Fall, 18-2, at 140 pounds, making it a 13-5 match.

Cohasset's 145-pound man, junior Chris McKenna, lost a heartbreaker, 6-5, to 2001 Sectional's finalist Rob Affleck despite battling a case of the flu and a high fever.

"This match should give people an idea of just how far Chris has come," raved Sweeney. "For him to do this well against a wrestler of Affleck's ability, as sick as he was, was extremely impressive. I can see him surprising some people at Sectionals."

Dan Littauer's Major Win got the Skippers back to within seven, but Rockland's 160-pound star Rob Shemkus pinned Cohasset soph Drew Musto to make it 22-9 at the mid-point of the match.

Junior Mike Casey (171 pounds) was also running a fever, but somehow found a way to pull off a third period pin on Rockland's Joe Cole. Casey was leading 10-2 at the time, but those additional three points proved significant.

Firs year junior wrestler Cosimo Cambi got reversed and thrown to his back by Rockland's Nick Chase in the opening moments of the 189-pound bout to go down quickly, 5-0. After escaping the attempted pin, however, Cambi, a South Shore League all-star lineman in football, returned the favor with a reversal, but he finished the pin, making it a 22-21 match.

Freshman Matt Baroudi and senior captain John Hussey both gave away considerable amounts of weight to their counterparts at 215 and the 275-pound limit heavyweight divisions, respectively, but both pulled off first period wins to put the Skippers I ncontrol at 33-22.

Freshman Jonathan Littauer also gave away weight to Bulldogs sophomore star Paul Robinson, and that proved telling in an 11-0 loss that featured Jonathan fending off a pair of pin attempts.

Jonathan (Dan's little brother), who has maintained his weight at around 101 pounds this season, has regularly gone up against grapplers weighing close to 110 pounds—a significant difference at this weight class. After wrestlers cut weight for a weigh-in several hours before a match, they often bulk up. And the situation is less advantageous for the younger Littauer since the weight limit for 103 was extended to 105 two weeks ago.

By relinquishing only four points, Littauer gave Kehoe the chance to clinch the victory with a win, somethign his fellow frosh did with style.

After being thrown to his back three times by Mahoney in the match, Kehoe trailed 9-5 late in the second period when he earned four points for an escape and quick take down to tie things up heading into the final period.

Mahoney chose to get on top to open the final frame, but Kehoe managed to swing the advantage with a nifty escape. With a small advantage in points, Kehoe then stuck Mahoney to the mat with under a minute remaining.

This made the final match of the day at 119 academic, but Cohasset senior captain Vinnie Gratta still gave Rockland's Jackie Erickson all he could handle before getting surprised by a quick takedown and pin.

Wrestling Notes

Cohasset 45, Carver 24

The Cohasset team got to wrestle for the undisputed league crown by taking down Carver last Wednesday, 45-24.

Jonathan Littauer (105) and Terry Baroudi (132) recorded Tech Falls, while Phil Strazzulla (127) and Chris McKenna (147) had major decisions.

On a roll

Needless to say, the Skippers head into Saturday's Div. 3 sectional championships on something of a roll.

After starting the season 3-7, the Skippers rallied for its first plus-.500 season in the three years, finishing 12-10. The only three losses over the second half of the season, to nine wins, were to higher Division powers Duxbury and New Bedford, and perennial Div. 3 state contender Wayland.

"It took us some time to get things rolling, but we really came one, and the kids deserve all of the credit in the world for their hard work and commitment," raved coach Sweeney.

The veteran coach attributed much of the reason behind the slow start to the cutback in practice time this season resulting from the conversion of the upstairs gymnasium at Cohasset High into a library. The team is now given just two hours of gym time on practice days, which Sweeney says translates to more like an hour and a half when you factor in unrolling and rolling up the mats.

"We've got 24 wrestlers, including a lot of first year guys, so we didn't really have a lot of time this year to work on things,' noted Sweeney. "But the kids committed themselves to getting the most out of that practice time."

He continued: "That's one of the real satisfying things about this season. All 24 guys worked hard and found some way to contribute to what we accomplished."

An abundance of opportunities

Sweeney said he honestly believes he has wrestlers in all 14 weight categories who have a legitimate shot to finish top six at the Sectional championships this Friday (1:30 p.m. start) and Saturday (10 a.m start) at Mansfield High. Top six finishers will advance to the Div. 3 state championship next weekend at Taconic High School in Pittsfield, the site of Cohasset's state Div. 3 championship in 1999.

Dan Littauer, Terry Baroudi and Strazzulla all advanced to the State Championships last winter, finishing second, third and fourth, respectively, at Sectionals.

Even though Littauer has wrestled only once this season, Sweeney anticipates he'll be a top four seed based on his previous record, and said he'd be "real surprised" if Littauer did not medal this time as well to move on.

"As long as the injury doesn't flare up, I think Danny will do very well," asserted Sweeney.

With membership in the Div. 3 South Section increasing from 15 to 20 this winter, Sweeney notes that competition is now much tougher in several divisions. The coach believes Baroudi's 135-pound division may, in fact, be the deepest top to bottom.

"There are nine kids at 135 pounds who probably won more than 75 percent of their matches this season, just like Terry," said Sweeney. "Terry's definitely going to have to be on top of his game to medal."

He added that Strazzula had "six to eight real quality wrestlers" to contend with at 125.

The competition for Littauer at 152 appears daunting, but Sweeney believes several top wrestlers may move up to the 160-pound division to take advantage of a thinner field.

Lena Britto, on the right, with Leslie and Blanche Thompson of Cohasset.

Autobiography includes memories of Cohasset

In "Yankee Mericana: My Cape Verdean Odyssey," Lena Britto looks back upon a lifetime of achievement. She begins with the story of her grandfather, Ben Horta Varella, a former whaler who settled in Rochester, Mass. in the late 19th-century, then returned to Cape Verde to bring his wife and children to America. When the ship he was a passenger on foundered and went adrift in the mid-Atlantic, her grandfather took command and is credited with saving all on board. Varella Corner in Rochester is named after him.

Despite early success in school, Britto quit at age 15 to go to work to help her family during the Great Depression — then went on to graduate from college at age 64. Between those years, she worked as a welder at the Fore River Shipyard during World War II, owned her own beauty salon, obtained her real estate license, worked as a social worker for the Division of Social Services, and raised a family. She did all this while helping others in her community, and in doing so, befriended the rich and famous, including movie stars and governors.

Among Lena Britto's fondest memories are the visits her family made to Cohasset when she was a child. In a chapter titled, "Keeper of the Light," she tells of her mother's cousin, Samuel Perry, a lighthouse keeper at Minot's Light. When not on duty at the lighthouse, Perry lived with his wife on High Hill Road in a house that, at that time — the 1920s and 30s — had a clear view of the ocean and the distant lighthouse. Perry, who fought in World War I, often told the children of his experiences in the trenches and the horrors of gas warfare.

On these visits to Cohasset, her brother's playmate was a neighborhood boy named Lancelot Thompson. "Smiley" Thompson grew up to become a popular clarinet and saxophone player for such notables as Billy Eckstine, Cab Calloway and Duke Ellington.

After an absence of nearly seven decades, Britto returned to Cohasset to seek out her childhood haunts. With the help of her Cohasset friends, the O'Tooles, she was able to locate the house where she used to visit as a child. To her great joy, she learned that "Smiley" Thompson's brother Leslie still lives in the house across the street with his wife, Blanche, who for 20 years was organist at the Boston Naval Shipyard. Among the many pictures in "Yankee Mericana" is a photograph of Britto with the Thompsons enjoying a musical moment with Mrs. Thompson at the piano.

"Yankee Mericana" is published by Rock Village Publishing, a regional publisher. For information, contact the publisher at 41 Walnut St., Middleborough 02346; or telephone them at 508-946-4738.

Play auditions

Hull Performing Arts announces open auditions for the musical "Pump Boys and Dinettes" by John Foley, Mark Hardwick, Debra Monk, Cass Morgan, John Schimmel and Jim Wann.

This musical tribute to life by the roadside takes place at a gas station on Highway 57. Across the street is an eatery called the "Double Cupp Diner." The four guys at the station have been known to do some auto repairs, but only when aided by quantities of time and beer. The Cupp sisters celebrate their home cooking with the same zeal they bring to being neighborly with the boys.

The show will be directed by Simpson Moore and the musical director will be Kathy Clancy.

The auditions are on Sunday, March 3, and Thursday, March 10, at 7:30 p.m. at the Anne Scully Senior Center, 197A Samoset Ave., Hull. Bring a song to sing. "Pump Boys and Dinettes" will be cast with three men and three women. Call 781-925-2406 for directions and more information about the show.

This project is sponsored, in part, by a grant from the Hull Cultural Council, a local agency supported by the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

Community center classes are offered

Cooking classes

The South Shore Community Center offers cooking classes. Chef Brendan Nolan has joined the Cooking Corner roster of chefs, offering two menus. First, Monday, Feb. 4, he will demonstrate the art of preparing seafood with his "Gone Fishing" class. Nolan will demonstrate techniques for poaching, sautéing, and broiling. Nolan is also offering "Asta La Pasta" on Monday, March 4. this class will feature the art of making pasta along with an assortment of sauces and fillings. These classes run from 6:45 to 9 p.m. and are $45 for members, $50 for non-members and will be held at the Community Center at 3 North Main Street.

For the romantic gourmet, Chef Robert Fatham of The Red Lion Inn offers an "Aphrodisiac Valentine's Dinner" on Tuesday, Feb. 12. The menu will feature risotto with white truffles, oysters with creme fraiche and caviar, pan roasted lobster with a vanilla bean buerre blanc, roasted baby vegetables, and a warm chocolate cake with orange-pepper compote and cardamom ice cream. Wine will be served. The cost is $70 per person. This class will be held at The Red Lion Inn, 71 South Main Street.

Don't miss 'Encore!' on Feb. 9

The Unicorn Singers and the Broad Cove Chorale, two of the South Shore's choral ensembles, will combine to present "Encore!" a pops/cabaret style performance at St. Anthony's Parish Hall on South Main Street, Cohasset on Saturday, Feb. 9 at 8 p.m. and again Sunday, Feb. 10 at 3 p.m.

This year's "Encore!" will feature costumed medleys from the Broadway shows, "Oklahoma!" and "Most Happy Fella," along with other lighthearted selections of jazz, barbershop, folk, pop and classical music. Both choruses, under the direction of Margo Euler, are noted for their creative presentations and the concert is a lively and colorful mid-winter pick-me-up!

Seating for the concert is at tables and in the pops tradition, audience members are encouraged to bring a festive picnic to enjoy during the performance.

Tickets for "Encore!" are $15 ($10 for students and seniors on Sunday) and are available at Nobles in Hingham Square or at Cards & Shards in Cohasset.

Drowned Hogs frolic in frigid waters

"I thought it was amazing to see so many people of all ages excited to be jumping into the winter ocean to help raise money for Wellspring!" said Allen Viden of Hingham, president of the Wellspring Board of Directors.

Two hundred and fifty "Drowned Hogs" frolicked in the frigid waters of Nantasket Beach last Saturday to raise money for Wellspring, a multi-service center in Hull. The swimmers, some wearing wild costumes, such as hula-hula skirts and pink tutus, endured an air temperature of 27 degrees, a water temperature of 37 degrees, and northwest winds of 10 miles per hour — all to raise money to support the many programs that Wellspring provides. Last year, more than $18,000 was raised, and this year's total is expected to exceed that sum.

Coach Anderson from Hull High School and his entire football team also took the plunge. It is rumored that next year they will extend a challenge to the Cohasset and Hingham football teams.

Board member, Janna Oddleifson of Cohasset marveled at the crowd's enthusiasm and the swimmers' stamina. "Maybe it's even worse being a spectator," she said. "At least, when you're a Drowned Hog you have all that excitement and energy to keep you warm!"

"Heavenly Hogs," "Gear Hogs," and "Boss Hogs," the sponsors of the Drowned Hog event can choose among many different levels of participation.

Almost as soon as the "designated driers" had finished handing towels to the last of the Drowned Hogs to race in from the beach, plans were already underway to make next year's event surpass even this one.

Dozens of press and media reporters covered this year's swim. Let those groundhogs in Pennsylvania take notice. The Drowned Hogs in Hull are hoping to gain national attention.

If you're interested in being a Drowned Hog, a sponsor, or a designated drier, please call 781-925-3211.

STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

Two enthusiastic "Drowned Hogs" are joined by hundreds of others as they head into the chilly Atlantic off Nantasket Beach. The hearty men, women and children take to the waters to try and outwit Pennsylvania's Punxsutawney Phil. If the Drowned Hogs frolic in the icy water and all submerge before returning then spring is just around the corner.

Patriots fan Gina Fullerton emerges from the surf at Nantasket Beach along with hundreds of others who took part in the annual event to raise money for the Wellspring Multi-Service Center.

These kids can't wait to get into the chilly water! Who could blame them? The air temperature was 27 degrees and the water was 37 degrees. The "Drowned Hogs" annual event started in 1996 and has grown every year. On Saturday more than 250 brave souls took a dip to help Wellspring.

HEALTH WATCH

Parents of teens

The Social Service League of Cohasset is offering a support group for parents of teens that are experiencing turbulent times in their lives. The group would provide the opportunity for parents to share their concerns about teen lifestyles and experimentation that may present symptoms of stress and anxiety in the lives of parents.

The confidential support program affords parents the opportunity to share their concerns and explore options to deal with this issue. The discussion is facilitated by a licensed clinical social worker and examines the input from all those with concerns.

This support group is strictly confidential and held every other Monday from 6:30-7:45 p.m. Space is limited to 10. If you are interested, please call 781-383-0771.

Breast cancer prevention

Deborah Forter, executive director of the Massachusetts Breast Cancer Coalition will speak on Tuesday, Feb. 12, at the Senior Citizen Center at Hingham Town Hall, 224 Central St. at 8 p.m. Her topics will be:

- The environmental causes of breast cancer.
- The precautionary principle
- Direct to consumer advertising by drug companies

The meeting is free and open to the public.

Sponsored by the AAUW (American Association of University Women) Refreshments at 7:30 p.m. For further information or possible cancellation due to weather, call 749-2542 or 749-5926.

Diabetes workshop

Cohasset Elder Affairs will hold a workshop on Living the Good Life With Diabetes on Feb. 22, from noon to 1:30 p.m. Millie Hawke RNC, Diabetes Educator, and Lynn White, Nurse Practitioner, will discuss risk factors and signs and symptoms of diabetes along with staying healthy with nutrition and exercise. Bring a bag lunch. Dessert and beverages will be served. Call 781-383-9112 for information.

Local organization gives autistic children a place to play

By Dan Gravel
DGRAVEL@CNC.COM

The building at 1 Snow Road in Marshfield houses a bank and a dentist's office. It is a serious looking place from which one does not expect to hear the thud of balls being kicked about or the muffled laughter of children at play.

The unexpected sounds come from the second floor office of A Place of Our Own, an organization serving the social therapy needs of children who have Autism Spectrum Disorders.

Teachers and parents are always harping to children how learning can be fun and A Place of Our Own seems to be in line with those claims. Inside there are games, toys, balls, mats, a TV, a computer, a popcorn machine and various other sources of amusement. Most importantly for the children who suffer from autism, there are friends.

Leslie Hines, who runs the after school program, said although there is a strain on resources in the region, one can find services for things such as speech and occupational therapy without too much difficulty, "but what they don't get is social therapy."

She said her son Christian, who is autistic, and others who take part in the program, are developing better interaction skills.

"It has really brought a lot of kids out. There is a lot of good learning that occurs here in the social realm," she said.

A Place of Our Own was started two years ago with private donations from the Hines family and employees of the Trammell Crow Company in Boston. It is the mission of the foundation to provide a fun, safe, enriching environment for children to play, learn and have the opportunity to make friends. The organization also employs a speech therapist and part-time special education teachers.

Autism is a complex developmental disability that typically appears during the first three years of life. It impacts the normal development of the brain in the areas of social interaction and communication skills. Children and adults with autism typically have difficulties in verbal and non-verbal communication, social interactions, and leisure or play activities. The disorder makes it hard for them to communicate with others and relate to the outside world. But when children are diagnosed at an early age and given intensive services they can make tremendous gains.

Jeanne Monaco is the mother of a child who attended A Place of Our Own last year and she has nothing but positive things to say about the foundation.

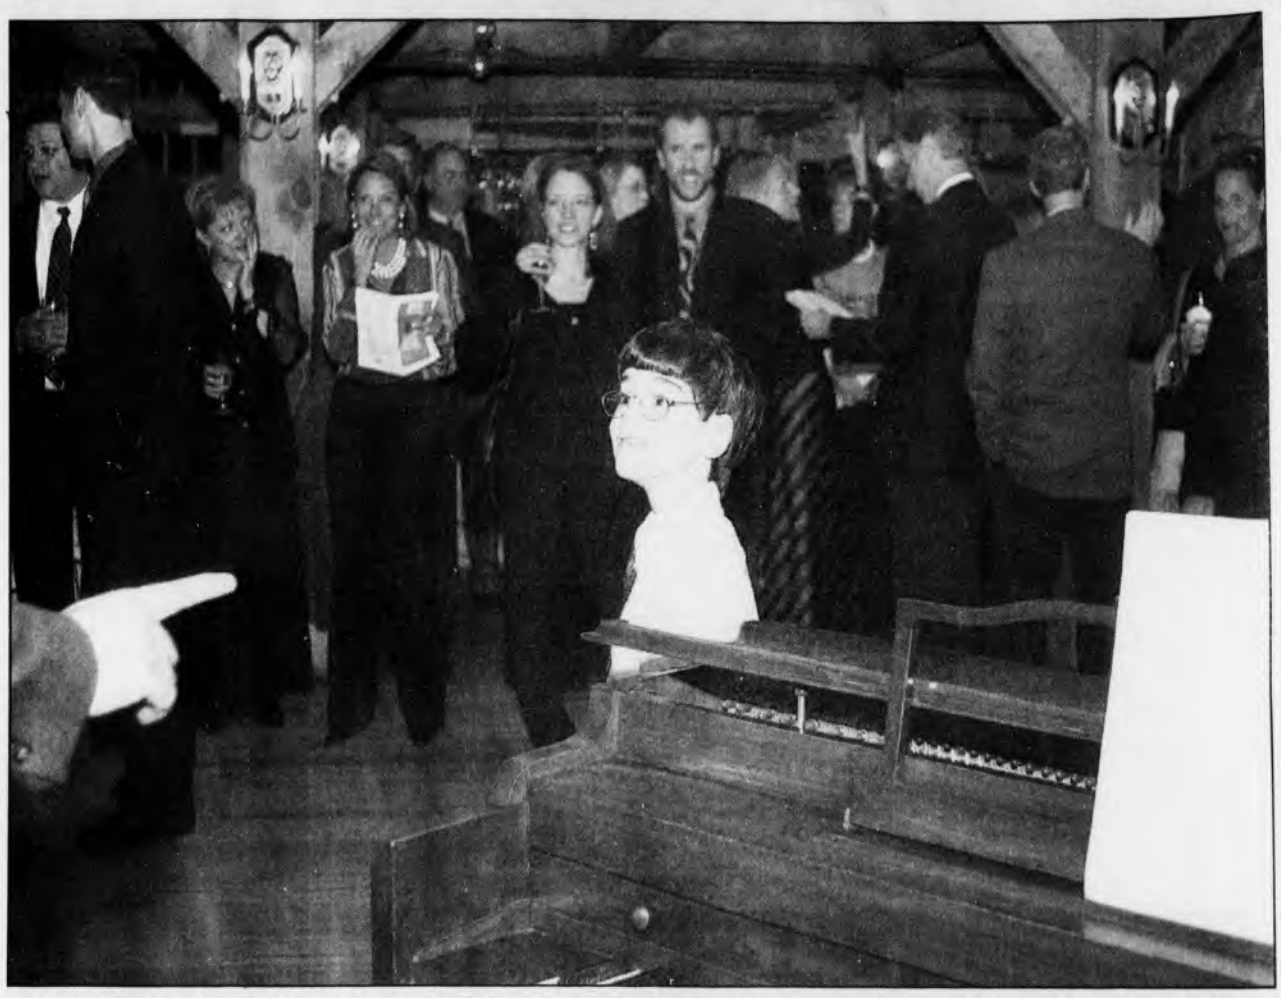
"I think it's absolutely fabulous. My daughter loves it. It makes her feel like she belongs," she said, adding, "There's not much out there for special needs kids."

Monoco said her daughter, who is developmentally delayed, has become more confident socially and interacts better with her peers since taking part in the program.

Another obvious benefit is location. Whereas parents formerly were forced to drive into Boston or to Cape Cod for their children's therapy, A Place of Our Own makes it much more convenient. On top of that the program has been run free of charge since its inception, something Hines may have to reconsider as funds dip lower.

"I'm committed to keeping it going for them," she said. "I love these kids, they're a very misunderstood population. All of them have gifts."

A benefit for A Place of Our Own was held Saturday at the Red Lion Inn.



The center of attention, Matthew Savage, 9, takes a cue to start the second set while an appreciative crowd waits at Saturday night's event at the Red Lion Inn. You can learn more about Matthew and the Trio at www.savagerecords.com. Proceeds from their CD sales benefit autism research.

John and Leslie Hines, who founded A Place of Our Own, with John's brother Stephen, right, take a moment to talk about the non-profit center for children with autism during the fundraiser at the Red Lion Inn on Saturday.

Nine-year-old jazz pianist Matthew Savage, leader of The Matt Savage Trio, performs at the Red Lion Inn to benefit "A Place of Our Own". The Trio's sidemen are world-class, adult musicians John Funkhouser on bass and Steve Silverstein on drums. Funkhouser teaches at The Berklee College of Music, and Silverstein teaches at The Rivers School.

OBITUARIES

Sheldon Nichols Ripley

Author, theatrical designer on South Shore and Cape

Sheldon Nichols Ripley, of West Harwich and formerly of Cohasset, died Jan. 23, 2002 at Cape Cod Hospital. He was 76 years old.

Born in Cohasset, he was the son of Sheldon H. Ripley and Marguerite (Albertson) Ripley Giles.

Mr. Ripley served as a Seaman First Class in the U.S. Navy during World War II. He graduated from Williams College (cum laude) with a B.A. degree.

Author of two children's biographies, "Ethan Allen, Green Mountain Hero" and "Matthew Henson, Arctic Hero," both published by Houghton Mifflin, he also co-authored and edited "The 1776 Guide for Massachusetts," published by Harper and Rowe.

Mr. Ripley began his career as a set designer and scenic artist in New York as well as summer stock in Vermont and with Cohasset's South Shore Players. He spent 40 years as a creative director in the advertising industry and was vice president of the DR Group in Boston, an affiliate of Needham Harper Worldwide, Inc.

Before retiring and moving from Cohasset to Cape Cod in 1990, Mr. Ripley was active in the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, the Cohasset Dramatic Club, and was on the board of directors of the South Shore Music Circus Associates (owners of the Cape Cod Melody Tent).

On the Cape, he designed or painted stage settings for the Harwich Junior Theatre, the Chatham Drama Guild and for the Playhouse of the Academy of Performing Arts.

He had also been active with the Harwich Historical Society and the Cape Museum of Fine Arts in Dennis.

Mr. Ripley was an active member of the American Lawn Bowls Association, the New England MG "T" Register, and the Vintage Sports Car Club of America.

He leaves his wife, Denise (Brian) Ripley; his daughter, Lesley Greenfield of London, England; his son, Sheldon Ripley of Tampa, Fla.; and his grandson, Daniel Ripley of Tampa. He also leaves a sister, Harriet Gay of Kailua, Hawaii; two brothers, Edward Franklin Ripley of Philadelphia and Noel Albertson Ripley of Cohasset; as well as several nieces and nephews.

Funeral arrangements were made by the Doane, Beal and Ames Funeral Home in West Harwich.

Donations in Mr. Ripley's memory may be made to the Harwich Junior Theatre, Inc., Box. 168, West Harwich 02671.

Russell H. Mitchell

Russell H. Mitchell, age 67, of Bradenton, Fla. and formerly of Cohasset, died Dec. 25, 2001 in Bradenton after a long illness.

Mr. Mitchell lived his early life in Cohasset where he graduated from high school. The then attended the Vesper George School of Art in Boston.

In 1958, he moved to Bradenton where he founded and designed Mitchell Fiberglass Boats.

He leaves his wife, Mary (Ramise) Mitchell of Bradenton. He also leaves his children, Buddy Mitchell of Sarasota, Fla., Angela Mitchell of Parrish, Fla., Gena Rogers of Bradenton, Fla., Denise Bramblett of Palatka, Fla., Jackie Porter of Ocala, Fla., Mary Lundstrom of Orange Park, Fla., Pamela Middleburg of Lebulon, N.C. and Grace Johnson of Metarie, La. He leaves his two brothers, Francis Mitchell of Cohasset, Kenneth Mitchell of Vermont and sister, Eileen Sargent of New Hampshire. He was married to the former Barbara DeMellio of Scituate.

Private funeral services and interment were conducted in Bradenton, Fla.

Citizens for Life

The South Shore Chapter of the Massachusetts Citizens for Life (MCFL) will meet Tuesday, Feb. 19 from 7:30-9 p.m. at St. Paul's Parish House on Fearing Road in Hingham. New members are welcome.

Donations may be sent to MCFL South Shore, P.O. Box 591, Accord 02018.

The group's annual fund-raising yard sale will be May 4 (rain date, May 18) from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Cardinal Cushing School in Hanover.

For information, call 781-925-5323.

March Evensong at Saint John's

A full choral Evensong will be held at Hingham's Church of St. John the Evangelist on Sunday, March 3, at 5 p.m. The Reverend Robert B. Edson, Rector of St. John's, will conduct the service, and Choir Director Helen Ward Mannix will direct the Choir of St. John's in a program of music by Heath, Ley, Bainton, and Byrd. Craig Smith will be organist for the program.

The service is open to the public, and all are welcome at the reception following in St. John's Upper Weld Hall. The church is located at 172 Main St. in Hingham, and is handicap-accessible.

For further information, call the church office at 781-749-1535.

Pizza and prayer

High schoolers are invited for "pizza and prayer" each Wednesday from 6:15 to 7:30 p.m. at St. Anthony Parish Center.

The weekly meeting is open to students in grades nine to 12, and offers students a chance to meet friends and share their faith informally.

The next youth ministry ski outing will be a day trip to Mt. Sunapee on Saturday, March 2. The cost is $50 and registrations will be taken by calling Bill Coleman at 781-544-0195 through Friday, Feb. 15.

Beginning March 1, the hours for First Friday devotions will change. The new hours will be from noon to 4:45 p.m. for Eucharistic Adoration; Benediction lot 4:45 p.m. and Mass at 5 p.m. Although all parishioners are urged to visit the Blessed Sacrament during the afternoon hours, it is necessary that at least two people be present at all times. Volunteers who can commit to being present for 30 minutes to an hour are asked to call the parish office at 383-0219 to register.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MUNICIPAL OFFICIALS AND CONCERNED CITIZENS OF QUINCY AND MILTON REGARDING THE QUARRY HILLS PROJECT

In the mid-1990's, a group of politically-connected Quincy developers proposed to use excavate generated by Boston's Big Dig project to build a public golf course, ballfields and other recreational facilities on 450 acres of mostly public land, including the closed Quincy Landfill, the not-yet-closed Milton Landfill and adjacent land owned by the Metropolitan District Commission. The developers did not propose to invest significant funds of their own; instead, they would lease this public land for 50 years at nominal cost, and use "tipping fees" paid by the big Dig to construct the project. As originally conceived, the project would require less than 5 million tons of Big Dig dirt.

Today, five years later, the Big Dig has dumped 13 million tons of contaminated dirt and other materials on the Quarry Hills site and into nearby historic quarries. Much of this material, particularly on the Quincy portion of the site, sits in enormous stockpiles, raw and exposed to the weather. Virtually all of the wetlands on the sites's periphery have been smothered by tons of fine sediments that wash down the project's steep side-slopes whenever it rains. Public parks and residential neighborhoods downstream have been repeatedly flooded with these sediments. Every major storm turns local streams milky gray with suspended pollutants.

The developers of Quarry Hills, who have been paid $100 million to take the Big Dig's contaminated dirt, now claim they are $10 million in debt and do not have enough money to finish the project as planned. Based on this claim of poverty, the developers recently sought and received approval to use a combination of sewage sludge, paper mill waste and sand - instead of clean topsoil – as the final covering for large portions of the site. Thousands of tons of this material have already been spread in Milton. For its part, the Big Dig recently announced that it no longer needs Quarry Hills, and will dump its last few million tons of dirt elsewhere.

Five years and $100 million later, there is no golf course and there are no ballfields. Instead, there are mountains of contaminated dirt, frequent dust storms, scores of flooded homes, acres of ruined wetlands, destroyed wildlife habitats and - incredibly - insufficient funds to finish the project as planned.

This is a critical juncture in the life of the Quarry Hills project. With the Big Dig leaving town and the developers crying poor, there is a real possibility that - as has happened on a much smaller scale in Melrose - we, the citizens of Quincy and Milton, will be left holding the bag. If not us, who will pay to finish the project that was promised, with great fanfare, so many years ago? Who will pay to repair the estimated $15-20 million in damage to wetlands and other natural resources? Who will compensate the homeowners whose lives have been turned upside down by clouds of fine-particle dust, constant flooding and sediment-filled streets, garages and basements? Must the public again bear the costs of political cronyism while the cronies relax in the Florida sun?

It is high time for public officials in Quincy and Milton to recognize the public health and environmental disaster looming in their backyard and do something about it. In our view, the responsible elected officials, namely the Mayor and City Council of Quincy and the Selectmen of Milton, with input from their respective Boards of Health, Conservation Commissions, Planning Boards and others, should undertake a fresh, thorough and objective review of the Quarry Hills project, focusing on public health hazards, environmental damage, public recreational benefits and project finances. Given the enormous size and scope of the project, this review cannot be limited to the piecemeal perspective available to one board in one municipality considering one specific permit or permit amendment. It is just this type of narrow, compartmentalized decision-making that has allowed the Quarry Hills project to lurch ahead, even while it is demonstrably out of control. To be effective, this review must be both comprehensive and coordinated among the responsible officials and agencies, and must answer the following pressing questions, among many others:

- Is the developers' shell corporation, Quarry Hills Associates, Inc., still entitled to a 50-year, sweetheart lease on this public land?
- Does it remain the City of Quincy's position that sludge will not be permitted as the final covering for the Quincy portion of the site?
- Can the developers' $42 million performance bond be tapped to finish the project and produce the same recreational complex that was promised to the public?
- Should escrowed tipping fees and other funds held by the City of Quincy be released for environmental cleanup and compensation to the victims of Quarry Hills?
- What role will the Big Dig and its engineers, Bectel Parsons Brinckerhoff, play in cleaning up this mess?

Thank you for your time and your attention to this urgent matter. If you have any questions about any of the foregoing matters, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Riding high at River Wind Farm

By Paula Woodhull
PWOODHULL@CNC.COM

River Wind Farm in Pembroke has been around for more than 20 years, and during that time its reputation has grown along with the interest in horse riding as a sport — what some would say is an art.

For those to whom the equestrian pastime brings to mind a lifestyle straight out of the pages of a sumptuous Town and Country magazine photo spread, River Wind Farm, set on 15 acres with its well-tended barns and riding areas, certainly fits the bill. The Harvard University equestrian team trains there.

Horse lovers who take their riding seriously speak highly of River Wind Farm which is well-known and well-regarded on the highly competitive regional and national show circuit.

River Wind Farm teaches riding to young people just starting out and those who have decided to return to the sport after years of being away from it. Riders of all ages from around the South Shore and beyond come to River Wind Farm. The place is bustling on the weekends as riders hone their skills.

For those to whom the equestrian pastime brings to mind a lifestyle straight out of the pages of a sumptuous Town and Country magazine photo spread, River Wind Farm, set on 15 acres with its well-tended barns and riding areas, certainly fits the bill.

Each year River Wind Farm trains their riders to compete in the jumper, hunter and equitation divisions at the top-rated shows. Their riders consistently qualify for the major indoor winter circuit.

The farm is a thriving business enterprise, involved not only in teaching and perfecting riding techniques and style for competition, but also selling championship horses and bringing home ribbons from prestigious shows all over the country. The farm continually buys and sells horses for clients.

"This is the spot, it really is," Janet Waters says of River Wind Farm. Waters boards her horse Jackson at the farm, describing Jackson, tethered majestically in the barn after a workout, as " a gentle giant."

Waters — one would gather somewhat modestly — calls herself a beginner adult and commutes from her home in Milton to take advantage of River Wind Farm's indoor and outdoor riding facilities. There are two outdoor rings and one indoor.

"In terms of cleanliness and the quality of instruction, there's not a better place," she said, emphasizing the "exceptional" care the horses receive at River Wind Farm.

Coming to River Wind Farm is also a social outlet, she says. Waters enjoys the "social contact with people who have a similar interest" in riding. "A lot of adults come back to horses when they have time," said Waters.

The farm operates a large, state of the art indoor riding facility and a scrupulously maintained barn that can hold more than 30 horses. Inside, where distinctly horse-y smells rise up to the rustic rafters, individual stalls bear the horses' names — Tucker, Harry, Wiley and Hemingway, to name a few. Hemingway?

It is Susan Pimental's job to maintain the barn and feed the horses. Pimental, of Marshfield, works at the farm as the barn manager.

She does the physical labor required to keep the barn and horses in tip top condition. Pimental came to the farm two years ago, in search of a break from the high stress job of working in adult probation at the Quincy District Court.

Horses, she readily asserts, are easier to work with than people, although each horse has a distinct personality, some easier to get along with than others.

"It's the best job in the world," she said. "I wouldn't trade it for anything."

Pimental feeds the horses twice a day in the morning and afternoon. She notes that the horses do eat a lot, as they are not just for show. "Most of them are working horses," she explained.

River Wind Farm owner Carl Catani clearly has the business of horses in his blood. Catani has nurtured River Wind Farm over the years, having first learned about running a quality barn at the former Fleetwood Farm on Washington Street where he started out in the lowly job of cleaning stalls.

Fleetwood Farm has been at its current location off Route 139 since 1977. It's a business Catani has devoted his life to. "It's a hard business — seven days a week, 12 hours a day."

But it is a lifetime commitment that has had its rewards. River Wind Farm has branched out into a recently initiated program called hippotherapy which provides physically disabled youngsters the opportunity to ride horses, enhancing their physical and mental health. The program is offered by Cindy Spooner.

Competition among horse farms or "barns" has increased over the years. Catani said there are some 10 horse barns in the immediate area, in Pembroke, Marshfield, Halifax and Plympton.

For its part, River Wind Farm has garnered accolades on the A-rated show circuit. Catani's daughter, Deirdra, trains horses at the farm and this fall she was second place reserve champion at the New England and Massachusetts Equitation Finals. Deirdra spends six weeks in late winter training horses in Ocala, Fla.

One of Catani's students, Abby Adams Greer, is now his top trainer and professional rider. She started riding at the farm when she was 8.

"Abby was naturally a good rider at a young age, but her steady drive and dedication made her a great rider," said Catani.

Last fall Greer won Reserve Champion in the Green Conformation Hunter division at Washington International. Riding Amir, owned by Emily Bickford, Greer won Champion in the Green Conformation Hunter division at Ocala, Fla. and champion awards at shows in the Catskills and Saratoga, N. Y. For more than 10 years she has routinely brought home top awards competing as a professional at the nation's most prestigious shows.

Emily Bickford is another of the farm's best riders. Last fall she placed first in Zone 1 and was a member of the winning Prix des States team at the Pennsylvania National.

Greer said that while she still enjoys competing, she gets tremendous satisfaction from seeing her students do well.

"It is rewarding to watch all their hard work come together and to know you have taught someone well and that you, in your small way, have helped them reach a goal."

NHS student lends hand at home and abroad

This continues our ongoing campaign recognizing local teens who give back to their communities.

Watch for a new Spirit of Community feature each month. We welcome your nominations. Please see our ballot on the next page.

Some teenagers like to play video games. Some like listening to music. Others like participating in sports.

Norwell High School senior Jason Galvin enjoys striving to make a difference in people's lives.

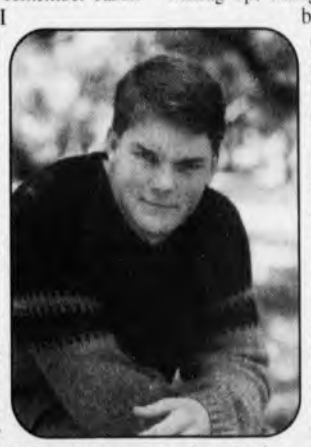
Spirit of Community

"Doing community service is enjoyable to me," Jason said. "I feel it lets me put my time to good use. I'm compelled to do it."

Jason, 18, has been involved with numerous community service projects in and out of school for many years. One of the most notable endeavors is the work he has done in the Dominican Republic. Through his involvement with the NHS chapter of Amnesty International he became of aware of the need for help in the Dominican Republic. For the past three summers he's traveled there and helped to help build septic systems and homes for single mothers. Jason will return again this year.

Closer to home, Jason is involved with the Habitat for Humanity organization. He said his work with the organization involved helping to build a number of homes at a site in Quincy. Jason said his father, John, is very active within the organization, and that's how he initially found out about it. His mother, Laurie, said Jason learned about the group at a very young age when its founder, Millard Puller, was visiting the Galvin household more than 10 years ago.

"After he visited our home, I remember Jason saying 'Mom, when I grow up I want to be just like Millard Puller,'" she said. "It just built gradually after that day."



Closer to home, Jason is an Eagle Scout, active member of his church, a member of the NHS chapter of Amnesty International and Habitat for Humanity.

Jason is an active member of the Boy Scouts and it was just two weeks ago that he received his Eagle Scout badge for helping to build a new room at the United Church of Christ in Norwell. Jason stays very involved with church activities as well.

Jason is a member of the diversity club at school, and recently, he has helped lead a couple of diversity-related school assemblies. NHS principal Steve Mahoney said Jason is currently taking part in a diversity training program where he and other students go talk to elementary school children and tell them about treating individuals with respect.

"He's awesome," Mahoney said of Jason. "He's not just a spotlight leader. He gets stuff done. He's a neat, neat kid. He's quiet and unassuming but he is solid as a rock."

Not surprisingly, Jason is was also behind the implementation the Norwell Youth Group Holiday Ball for developmentally disabled young adults.

"That I really enjoyed," Jason said of the holiday ball. "All of them seem to love dancing a lot, and they just had a great time."

But Jason said the project he learned the most from was building the homes in the Dominican Republic. He said a typical day there consists of waking up, eating breakfast then walking to the building site to mix cement and dig trenches. Generally, when he goes to the Dominican Republic, he stays for about eight or nine days.

"The trips to the Dominican Republic changed my view of the world," Jason said. "It's not often that I actually travel outside of Norwell." Jason said he wants to keep making the trip for the rest of his life.

"I have personally enjoyed watching Jason grow from a little boy into a caring young man," said Norwell resident Wilma Goodhue, a friend of the Galvin family. "Although Jason loves what he does, he works very hard and in his young life has already made a difference in the lives of so many others."

Peter Steedman, a teacher at Norwell High School, said he was recently very proud of Jason when he led a Martin Luther King assembly at the school. He said Jason served as the emcee for the event.

"We needed someone to hold it all together," Steedman said. "That was Jason. He's really a quiet

Quick Cornmeal Cake

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Cornmeal cake is no more than a pound cake made with a combination of flour and cornmeal. Some recipes use baking powder for lift; others cream butter to provide aeration and volume. After having made five recipes from various cookbooks, I found two problems. Many of these cakes were heavy and too dense while others were lacking in flavor, especially that of the cornmeal. I also wanted to avoid a lengthy preparation process since this should be a simple, all-purpose recipe.

I started with a working recipe consisting of 2 sticks butter, 1 1/4 cups sugar, 5 eggs, 3/4 cup cake flour, 3/4 cup coarse cornmeal, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1 1/2 teaspoons vanilla, and the zest from one lemon. I creamed the butter and sugar, added the eggs one at a time, and then added the dry ingredients. The cake was baked at 325 degrees in a 9 x 5-inch loaf pan for an hour. The flavor was fine but the texture was heavy so I backed off the cornmeal to a half cup and increased the flour to a full cup. This produced a much lighter cake. Next, I tried half cake flour and half all-purpose flour to improve the structure of the cake. (Perhaps cake flour wasn't sturdy enough to stand up to the weight of the cornmeal.) The results were disappointing. The cake was simply tougher. Next, I tried adding a teaspoon of baking powder that, to my great surprise, did not alter the texture at all. It was time for an entirely new approach.

A recipe for lemon pound cake recently developed in the Cook's Illustrated test kitchen called for melted butter and a food processor for much of the mixing. It was both easy and turned out a lighter cake than the one I had made. I adjusted my recipe accordingly and baked it up. It was the best of the lot – lighter with the rich flavors of corn, butter, and lemon. The one thing I did not like was having to clean three bowls: the one used to melt the butter, the food processor, and the bowl used for the final incorporation of the dry ingredients. I decided, therefore, to try an electric mixer. I started the sugar, lemon zest and eggs in the bowl of a mixer. Next, I added the melted butter and vanilla, and finally the dry ingredients, which I had sifted onto a piece of waxed paper. The cake was perfect and I had only one bowl to clean instead of two.

The last series of tests revolved around the cornmeal. Polenta is a very coarsely ground cornmeal. Corn grits are similar. Instant polenta is less coarse and often partially cooked. Cornmeal is typically ground much finer than polenta. I tried all of them in the above recipe and preferred the polenta and instant polenta for their rich flavor. Instant polenta is usually easy to find but, in a pinch, use any cornmeal you can find, the coarser the better.

QUICK CORNMEAL CAKE

Melting the butter and using an electric mixer makes preparation easy. Polenta or instant polenta are best for this recipe. Polenta is simply a coarsely ground cornmeal. The almond variation is, in my opinion, better than the classic master recipe below.

2 sticks unsalted butter, plus additional for the pan

1 cup cake flour, plus additional for the pan

1/2 cup cornmeal, coarsely ground preferred

1 teaspoon baking powder

1/2 teaspoon salt

1 1/4 cups sugar

4 large eggs

Finely grated zest from one lemon, about 2 teaspoons

1 1/2 teaspoons vanilla

1. Adjust oven rack to center position and heat the oven to 325 degrees. Grease a 9 x 5-inch loaf pan with butter. Dust with flour, tapping out the excess. Melt the butter and allow to cool slightly. Sift the flour, cornmeal, baking powder and salt onto a piece of parchment or waxed paper.

2. Place the sugar, eggs and lemon zest in the bowl of an electric mixer. Beat on medium until well combined, about 30 seconds. Add the melted butter and vanilla and beat on medium-low until combined, about 10 seconds, increase speed to medium and mix an additional 10 seconds. Fold the dry ingredients into the egg/sugar/butter mixture in three batches. Transfer batter to prepared pan.

3. Bake until golden brown and a skewer inserted into the center of the cake comes out clean, approximately 60 minutes, rotating the pan halfway through baking. Cool for 10 minutes and invert onto a wire rack. Serve slightly warm or at room temperature. Makes 1 loaf.

ALMOND VARIATION

Omit the lemon zest. Reduce the vanilla extract to 1 teaspoon and add 1/4 teaspoon pure almond extract along with the vanilla.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6

The combination of a Sagittarius moon and applying Venus/Uranus alignment makes this a wonderful day for vacationing. People will be cheerful and outgoing. If you are working, it may be difficult to settle down to practical matters and easy to overlook important details. Be careful not to go to extremes between 3:54-6:54 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. The remainder of the evening rates high for relaxing and enjoying favorite friends, leisure activities.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7

Gear up for a hectic morning. Allow extra time to get where you are going. At 7:38 a.m. the Sagittarius moon interacts with Uranus and becomes inactive. Venus and Uranus align at 10:22 a.m. Expect the unexpected. This planetary combination may bring new experiences into your life or new romantic attractions. On the other hand, this is not a favorable time for taking risks or going on shopping sprees. A sobering Capricorn moon takes over at 6:08 p.m. In addition, Saturn, the planetary ruler of Capricorn, begins direct travel at 8:34 p.m. You can catch up on work or study projects this evening.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 8

The planet Mercury takes the spotlight today. At 12:28 p.m. Mercury begins to travel in direct motion. The next Mercury retrograde period will begin in May. It is okay to initiate new projects this afternoon. However, influences are most favorable next week, on the light side of the new moon. Today the moon continues its travel in pragmatic Capricorn, prompting you to stay busy with business and practical matters. A lunar alignment to Mars this evening warns you to keep the rhetoric down. Know when it's time to call it a night.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9

This is a day to get things done. Make up a list of things to do and stay busy. You can be extremely productive. Tackle jobs you've been putting off and get them out of the way. Zero in on responsibilities you have take on, promises you have made. Now is the time to fulfill them. Plan a quiet evening.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 10

The Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury at 1:50 a.m. and becomes inactive. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 4:15 a.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. This is a wonderful day for socializing or developing projects that need help and support from others. Community events, team sports, charitable endeavors also get the green light. Surf the internet; network, collaborate with others.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11

The dark side of the new moon brings a time for cleaning out and preparing the way for new activities. A harmonious alignment of Mars and Pluto reinforces today's theme. This is a day to do some serious soul-searching; let go of the past, free yourself from negative thinking and self-defeating behavior patterns. You can cut through obstacles and gain major insights. The planet Venus enters Pisces at 8:18 p.m., remaining there until March 7.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12

The new moon occurs at 2:41 a.m., 23 1/2-degrees of Aquarius. At 5:21 a.m. the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. Allow extra time to get where you are going. There are likely to be unexpected distractions, setbacks. The green light for new starts goes on at 3:53 p.m., when the moon enters Pisces. This brings a particularly favorable period for developing creative projects. Follow your first impression; your instincts are on target.

Witness the wonders of the winter garden

Green thumbs up

Part 3

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Brilliant sunshine and brisk temperatures ushered in the month of February, as Punxsutawney Phil reportedly saw his shadow, suggesting that gardeners must endure another six weeks of winter weather. Groundhog Day marks the midway point between the winter solstice and the spring equinox and since the late 1800's, superstitious folks have relied upon the prognostications of this hibernating rodent to predict when spring weather is likely to arrive. Hundreds of spectators gather each year to witness this annual event as a chubby Phil emerges from his climate controlled habitat to render his insight, his determination being subsequently documented in the Congressional Record. Imagine giving credence to this destructive pest that devours our treasured plants and is a curse to all that have experienced its devastation. Not too surprisingly, 85 percent of the time, he indicates that winter will continue but his forecast may be off the mark this year as the ground remains barely frozen and our seesaw weather offers the promise of an early spring.

While Chuck snoozes in his cozy burrow, there is considerable evidence that his friends and relatives have been quite active during this mild winter season. Despite the fact that much of our vegetation lies dormant beneath the frozen ground, little footprints in the snow indicate that bunnies and squirrels are feasting on the tips and buds of slender twigs and branches, having nipped the stems with the precision of a razor-sharp pruning shears. In recent weeks, I have witnessed Bambi yanking holiday greens from my whiskey barrel and noticed telltale hoof prints in the soft earth. As the winter progresses, foraging deer are likely to become increasingly destructive as they prune our yews, rhododendrons, and mountain laurels. Apply a deer repellent during the next stretch of above freezing temperatures to minimize damage. If commercially produced mixes are not available, a bottle of Tabasco sauce, a dash of hot pepper and a dab of liquid dishwashing soap can be combined in a pump sprayer and applied to plants in jeopardy.

Further scrutiny of my gardens this week revealed that a number of evergreen perennials seem to have been particularly appealing as winter food sources. These plants are essential components in my efforts to design gardens that provide color in all seasons, but their fleshy green leaves make them equally tempting to hungry critters. Evergreen members of the Carex family, properly termed sedges, have been especially hard hit. Their grass-like leaves have been nibbled nearly to the ground and while this trimming is unlikely to cause permanent damage, it tends to minimize their effectiveness as focal points in the winter garden. Carex 'Evergold', C. morrowii 'Variegata', and a vigorous new introduction, C. 'Ice Dance', offer variegated, evergreen foliage that provides year-round beauty for the partially shaded border.

The loveliest foliage of all the shady evergreen perennials belongs to the hellebores. Shiny, leathery leaves are deeply lobed and stunning above the dusting of snow.

Thin patches of snow persist in the shadier part of the garden, accenting the foliage of plants that retain their leaves through the winter months. In colder winters, the leaves of many of these perennials often disappear but our mild conditions have enabled the foliage to linger all season. The attractive, glossy green leaves of ginger (Asarum) form handsome mats throughout the year, a pleasant contrast to the textured seed heads of hostas and astilbes. Intertwined among these stalks, the silvery leaves of Lamium 'White Nancy' shimmer in the dappled sunlight, a charming accent to the deep green fronds of the Christmas fern (Polystichum) and the bronze leaves of Epimedium.

The loveliest foliage of all the shady evergreen perennials belongs to the hellebores. Shiny, leathery leaves are deeply lobed and stunning above the dusting of snow. The bear's foot hellebore (H. foetidus) is particularly noticeable this season due to its large clusters of pale green flower buds which top exceptionally dark green, divided leaves. Large clumps of the Christmas rose (H. niger) and the Lenten rose (H. orientalis) promise to provide spectacular, long lasting blooms in early spring.

In sunnier locales, the snow has all but disappeared, revealing the persistent leaves of many notable evergreen perennials. Low mats of creeping phlox (Phlox subulata) provide broad patches in varying shades of green that will be all but obliterated by the profusion of pink, white, red or lavender blooms in spring. Large clumps of candytuft (Iberis) demonstrate rich, deep green leaves on wiry stems that will be topped by snow-white clusters of flowers in May. Members of the Dianthus family furnish a multitude of worthy varieties, their evergreen cushions of foliage often tinted blue-green. Similar, blue-gray mounds are provided by the succulent leaves of myrtle spurge (Euphorbia myrsinites). In contrast, the wood spurge (E. amygdaloides) is a sensational source of reddish-bronze foliage.

Coral-bells cultivars contribute multiple seasons of beauty with their attractive mounds of heart-shaped leaves that persist throughout the winter months. Many new introductions offer stunning leaves tinted bronze, purple, brown and silver and are stunning when surrounded by a pristine blanket of snow.

The month of February is a time of anticipation for most gardeners. Although there will be many more wintry days before the official arrival of springtime, there is the sudden realization that the daylight hours are growing longer and a mailbox full of enticing catalogs to fuel spring fever. As you plan your purchases and design new gardens, be sure to include a few of these perennials that offer year-round beauty.

leader. He's not a kid who tries to draw attention to himself. He's also got a wonderful sense of humor and pretty high moral standards."

"I'm thrilled for him," added Jason's father, John. "He's done a lot and he's done great with all of it."

Jason wants to continue to stay involved with various community service projects, but right now he's busy filling out applications for college. Jason said he wants to pursue a degree in engineering.

Bond rating hike will save money

By Mary Ford

It's no secret when it comes to beauty, most Cohasset residents would give their town an "A" if asked.

And why not? The town's rocky coast, picturesque harbor, quaint village and pristine town common have attracted more than one Hollywood producer to its shores.

But when it comes to grading the town's finances, those same residents might shrug their shoulders or be concerned Cohasset's fiscal picture might not be as rosy as they'd like.

Power cut to burying village utility wires

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Dean Rizzo, the executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, hasn't been having a good month.

First a new group, dubbed "Friends of the Harbor" has been decidedly unfriendly to CRC, a private entity backed by businessman Peter Roy that is working with the town on harbor and village improvements. Saying the plans weren't incorporating citizen input, the group convinced selectmen to send a curt letter to Rizzo asking him to halt any future harbor workshops (see related story).

Then Rizzo, with design documents and charts in hand, hoped for a warm reception at last Wednesday's Planning Board meeting where he tried to present plans to bury the utility wires in the village.

Arthur and Jeanette Somerville of Cohasset, who recently moved to the New England Friends Home at Thayer House in Hingham, met at a Valentine's dance in 1928. The couple celebrated their 70th wedding anniversary last June.

A true love that lasts

Couple met at Valentine's dance

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

After more than 70 years, Valentine's Day still never gets old for Arthur and Jeanette Somerville of Cohasset.

"Every Valentine's Day is special to us," Jeanette said. "We always exchange gifts."

The couple actually met at a Valentine's party in Boston in 1928. Jeanette says she was a "country girl" who was staying in the city to work and attended the YMCA-sponsored event. She said she was lucky enough to grab a "city boy".

"Those were the days when young lovers played 'spin the cover' and 'post office' to get acquainted," she recalled.

After the party, Jeanette invited Arthur home to Sunday dinner to receive the required seal of approval, Arthur passed the test and became part of the family.

The couple has been married since 1931 (when Herbert Hoover was president) and celebrated their 70th anniversary last June.

"It's been all sunshine, roses and kisses."
— Jeanette Somerville

When they met, Arthur was working as a machinist at the Boston Naval Shipyard and Jeanette was working as a receptionist in the garment district. Although the couple wintered in Florida for many summers, Jeanette said they always loved coming home to Cohasset. The couple lived on Beechwood Street for nearly 40 years and are longtime members of the Beechwood Congregational Church.

The couple said Valentine's Day has changed through the years, becoming more commercial as time passed.

"Years ago you were lucky to get flowers," Jeanette said. "Now people expect diamond rings."

The couple said their relationship has only gotten stronger through the years.

"It's been all sunshine, roses and kisses," Jeanette said.

Jeanette, 91, and Arthur, 96, feel blessed they have been able to spend so many years together. They said in their wildest dreams they never envisioned living to such a golden age.

Kathy Bryanton, director of Cohasset Elder Affairs and a friend of the Somervilles for 15 years, said the couple provides inspiration for her.

"I see them as role models, as a couple who is completely enjoying one another," she said. "They always make the best of their circumstances and that's a great lesson."

Keeping World's End just the way it is

Management plan for park unveiled

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

World's End, with more than 60,000 visitors a year, offers 251 acres of peaceful tranquillity for walkers, bird-watchers and wildflower and butterfly enthusiasts.

"We want to preserve the property as it is today for future generations."
— Lisa Vernegaard, Trustees of Reservations

And that's how a committee charged with updating the park's management plan wants the property, which is owned by the non-profit Trustees of Reservations, to remain.

"It's amazing how much effort is involved in just keeping World's End like it is," said Nick Noon of Cohasset, chairman of the planning committee.

An updated management plan for the peninsula — the work of a team of a dozen staff members and volunteers over an eight-month period — was unveiled last week. Ecologists, historians and members of the community all had a say in how they feel the popular reservation should be cared for and preserved in the future.

The plan offers a comprehensive overview of the ecological, scenic and cultural features of World's End, which lies between Hingham Bay and the Weir River, and provides guidance for the future management of the reservation.

Lisa Vernegaard, director of planning and ecology for the Trustees, presented highlights of the plan recently.

"The goal is to protect the pastoral quality of World's End while also providing opportunities for visitors

Selectmen want authority to stay with Town Meeting

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

While selectmen may agree not enough citizens attend Town Meeting, they aren't about to endorse a plan that in their view, would make it less likely people participate in the venerable old forum.

But Leland and Leonora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, want more participation in town government and believe, especially on financial matters, that too few have the say for everybody else.

"It's possible at Town Meeting only 51 people could decide on how to spend the town's money,' Leland Jenkins said. "This is just a way for more people to be involved in the process."

To that end, the Jenkinses sought selectmen's support last week for two Citizen Petitions on the March 30 Town Meeting warrant that would direct more town business to the ballot box.

One would place an issue that gets the signatures of 15 percent of registered voters — approximately 750 residents — on the election ballot. And the other for financial matters, would require any article seeking an appropriation of $50,000 or more — excluding the operating budget — automatically be put on a ballot.

Selectmen decided not to support the two citizen petitions saying the articles aimed to abolish Town Meeting as a form of government.

"It seems that with these articles, it makes Town Meeting obsolete," Selectman Ronnie McMorris said. "It takes all the authority away from it."

But Leonora Jenkins said the aim of the article was to include those who aren't able to attend Town Meeting in decision making.

"Sometimes people aren't able to make it for a variety of reasons and they shouldn't lose their say in the government because of that," she said.

But selectmen think Town Meeting is still the fairest way to go.

"I like Town Meeting because there is always discussion about the articles," chairman Fred Koed said. "I think there is less information disseminated when it's on a ballot, and while there may be more people voting they'd be less informed."

Selectman Merle Brown said these articles just confuse the process rather than simplify it.

"This is just an added step that's not necessary," he said. "I don't know why we'd want this."

Selectman Michael Sullivan said he felt the process works the way it is now.

"Town Meeting is only one night a year," he said. "If people are that concerned over an article they should attend."

He added if citizens were able to obtain the necessary 750 signatures to have an article put on a ballot — they should just ask those same people to come to Town Meeting to vote on it there..

Voters will have the final say whether to approve the two Citizens Petitions when the issue is brought up at the March 30 Town Meeting.

School Committee, Feb. 14, 7:30 p.m. at the high school library.

Water Commission, Feb. 21, 8 p.m. at 339 King St.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Library grant

As expected, the state Board of Library Commissioners awarded Cohasset a $1.5 million grant at its meeting last week. The funding of the grant ensures local taxpayers there will be no hike in their taxes due to the library project.

The project is expected to cost $3.9 million but a majority of the money is coming from private donations and the state grant. Along with the $1.5 million state grant, the Paul Prat Library Trustees raised $1.1 million. That leaves approximately $1.2 million left that the town needs to cover.

The town will use $900,000 from the sale of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and the remaining $300,000 will be paid from within the levy limit.

At special Town Meeting in the fall, residents approved an article that said the town could spend approximately $500,000 on the project. Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees, said she is pleased the project won't use the entire amount of money appropriated.

"It's fantastic that the grant got funded and with the sale of the old library, we're right on track," she said.

Police chief update

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he would name the new police chief by the end of next week.

Three of the four finalists have been interviewed by various groups, including the school department, all of the town's department heads, and a contingent of police personnel, and the final candidate is expected to visit the town at the end of the week for his round of interviews.

Haddad said while the different groups aren't necessarily recommending their favorite candidate to him, they are helping with the process.

"I basically want them to give me a feel for how the candidate is going to interact with them," he said. "The police chief is constantly involved with these boards and its important they have a good relationship."

The four finalists includes local candidate Sgt. Robert Jackson, Lt. Richard Spirlet from New Bedford, Lt. Hipolito Nunez from Westfield, and Capt. Mark Louney from the Fitchburg Police Department.

Haddad said he is extremely please with how everything has gone.

"The process has been great," he said. "We have four extremely qualified candidates any one of whom would make a great chief."

Sidewalk issues

Dean Rizzo, executive director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation a private corporation working in conjunction with the village task force, wants more input on the design of the sidewalks and light fixtures for the village.

Rizzo said last week's public workshop on the design ideas were productive, but felt CRC needs more contribution from the community than just the about 35 people that attended the meeting.

He said he will ask selectmen for permission to display samples of the five different sidewalk types, ranging from brick to concrete and granite, and the various light fixtures, including colonial and gas light, outside where people can see them.

"While the workshop gave us a good gauge of what people like, we want to continue to hear from the residents," Rizzo said.

Rizzo said there is no timetable yet for when residents can expect to see the samples.

Cohasset Mariner wins four press awards

The Cohasset has won four awards in the annual New England Press Association Better Newspaper Contest.

For the fourth year in a row, the Cohasset Mariner was recognized by the judges — who praised its local news, photography and sports coverage — as one of the best newspapers in New England in its circulation category. This year the Cohasset Mariner, which has won the division two out of the past four years, received an honorable mention in the General Excellence Weekly A category.

The paper also won first place for its Local Election Coverage of the state representative race for the Third Plymouth District and received honorable mention in Education Writing, and Transportation and Commuter Reporting.

On its election coverage the judges said, "Great in-depth coverage. Well-written stories, good grasp of issues, particularly campaign finance. Graphics and layout highlight coverage and make this entry a clear winner."

A record-number of awards were presented to CNC/South — that includes the Cohasset Mariner — at the annual New England Press Association convention held Saturday in Boston. The regional association honors the best in weekly and daily newspaper reporting, photography and design from member papers throughout New England. Judging for the thousands of entries was conducted by the New York Press Association.

Nine first-place awards — for spot news reporting, spot news photography, sports section, headline writing, sports column, local election coverage, special section, a special award and front page — were garnered by CNC/South journalists. The group received 25 awards in total.

For the fourth year in a row, the Cohasset Mariner was honored with a general excellence award and local election coverage. Braintree Forum editor Cathy Conley was also recognized for the third straight year for editorial writing. CNC/South's annual section exploring the business climate on the South Shore secured a first-place award with judges highlighting the extensive coverage, design and strong writing.

Reporter Seth Jacobson's comprehensive reporting on homelessness on the South Shore as part of CNC/South's Gifts of Hope campaign also won a first-place award.

Runway lawsuit is back before Town Meeting

But selectmen won't support appropriation

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Selectmen decided not to support a citizens' petition article that would appropriate $30,000 for a lawsuit headed by a coalition of towns including Hull and Hingham in an effort to stop Logan's proposed runway 14/32.

Ralph Dormitzer, 334 S. Main St., gave a presentation to the selectmen last week outlining the citizens' concerns. At the forefront of their agenda, was the proposed runway would add approximately 100,000 flights over Cohasset a year. According to the group, this would also increase noise, pollution and negatively affect property values in town.

However, selectmen felt concerned citizens should concentrate their efforts on addressing the current problem rather than join a lawsuit which aims to stop a proposed problem.

"A large percentage of this problem exits today," said Selectman Michael Sullivan. "I'd rather spend money diverting the current flights than fighting the runway."

Selectman Merle Brown agreed.

"The problem is you're fighting an losing battle," he said. "Let's work on the current situation."

Selectman Tom Callahan said the concerned citizens need to come to the realization that they live in the vicinity of an airport.

"Part of my problem is that you have to accept we live with in 10 miles of Logan," he said. "Air traffic is going to be an issue."

Linda Wakeman of 255 Atlantic Ave., a proponent of the article, said air traffic could increase more significantly than people realize.

"This has the potential to destroy the character of Cohasset," she said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she agrees with the citizens' premise but is at odds with their approach. She also said getting involved in an open-ended lawsuit like this could open Pandora's box.

"Who knows how much money we'll spend on this," she said. "Thirty-thousand dollars could be just the tip of the iceberg."

Peter Wood, 77 Summer St., felt there was no need to discuss this issue as a similar article had been voted down at special Town Meeting in the fall.

"Three months ago the town defeated this article and decided we don't need to get involved," he said.

Wood said while he sometimes hears the planes overhead, the noise doesn't bother him.

Voters will have the final say when the article is addressed at the March 30 annual Town Meeting.

Jury's out on public bathrooms

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

We've all been there. Walking through the village, you have a cup of coffee here, a soda there, and then it hits you, you need to go to the bathroom. But where can one find a public restroom in the village?

While businesses in the village admit they allow customers to use their bathrooms every once in a while, the lack of public restrooms has some people upset.

George Roukounakis, owner of the Citgo station on South Main Street, said he has approximately 30 people a day coming in to ask to use the restroom.

"We've provided the public restrooms in Cohasset for 30 years and the town never thanks us for it," he said.

Roukounakis says he continually hears people tell him they have been referred to the gas station by village shops that assume his bathroom is a public one.

"It is a private bathroom for customers only, but we have been forced to open it up," he said.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private company working in conjunction with the village task force on improvements to the village, is brainstorming about possible places a restroom could be installed. Dean Rizzo, executive director for the CRC, said if the community feels there's a need to go forward with installing public restrooms, now would be the time to look into it. With work slated to begin in the summer for village improvements, the bathrooms could be fazed in.

"It's an issue that the town should address," Rizzo said. "The key would be finding a place where the restrooms would be inconspicuous."

Recently, the CRC met with the Youth Resources Committee about the possibility of installing a public bathroom, which would be attached to the teen center.

Jack Worley, chairman of the committee, said the board unanimously voted against the idea.

"If you have unattended restrooms near the teen center you never know what can happen," he said. "There could be perverts who just hang out there, especially when the train comes."

Worley said he's not necessarily opposed to the idea of a public bathrooms, but feels it's going to be hard to find a suitable location.

Businesses along South Main Street were split on whether the town should pursue this endeavor.

Anne Gabanelle, owner of French Memories at 64 S. Main St., said it's difficult for her restaurant to provide bathrooms for her customers because the facilities are located through the kitchen. She added that there are people that regularly come in and ask where they can find public restrooms.

> "It is a private bathroom for customers only, but we have been forced to open it up."
> — George Roukounakis, owner of the Citgo station

"I think they're a great idea," she said. "If the revitalization of the village is supposed to make it a more attractive and convenient place to shop, this is something I'd definitely recommend."

A clerk in a village shop who asked that her name not be used, said she didn't see the need for public bathrooms.

"Speaking as a taxpayer, I don't want to have to pay to maintain the bathrooms," she said. "We're not a real touristy town that needs extra facilities."

Erica Ford, manager of the Hunneman Coldwell Banker at 11 S. Main St., said she doesn't receive a lot of complaints about the lack of bathrooms.

"It's not overbearing," she said. "The people that come in are usually our customers so we generally let them use our bathroom."

Pierre Prat, director of operations at the Red Lion Inn Resort, said while he thinks public bathrooms would be a welcomed addition to the village, he doesn't see a pressing need for them.

"We let a lot of people use our bathrooms and while it's not a lot of extra work, public restrooms may ebb the flow of people coming in here," he said.

Hingham, a town which has public restrooms at its Bathing Beach off 3A near the harbor, hasn't experienced any problems with its public facilities. The restrooms are maintained by the Trustees of Hingham Bathing Beach and not the Department of Public Works.

"We really don't have too many problems with them," trustee Peter Fee said.

Fee said his group works on a budget of approximately $20,000 which helps to pay the three lifeguards who maintain the facility. The bathrooms are part of a bathhouse at the beach which includes public changing rooms and showers. (The facilities are close to the town center, unlike Cohasset's Sandy Beach.)

Dr. Joseph Godzik, Cohasset's health agent, said he doesn't think public bathrooms would prove too much of a financial burden for the town to bear.

"It's a pretty small space in there to get dirty," he said. "It wouldn't cost too much to maintain."

Roukounakis said the town could make a lot of money if it charged people to use the public facilities. He said that's a practice used by many European countries and it tends to work quite well.

"If they're not going to put in any restrooms maybe they should just pay me for my work," he said. Roukounakis said he hires a professional service that comes every two weeks to thoroughly clean his bathroom, which can go through nine rolls of toilet paper in a day in the summer.

"All those people going to the bathroom here creates quite a mess," he said. "The bathroom doesn't pay to keep itself clean."

VALENTINE'S DAY WISHES

Happy Valentine's Day Cohasset! I hope that all of you are able to celebrate this day with your special valentine, whether it is a significant other, your children, grandchildren or friends. If you know of someone who is alone or away from family and friends, pick up the phone or stop by to say hello to them.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

I want to send a special happy birthday out to my brother, Matthew who celebrated his 30-something birthday last Sunday. Matthew lived here in Cohasset with my mom and myself for several years and now lives in a wonderful home in Abington. Daniel, Callie and Cody wanted to make sure that their "Uncle Matt's" birthday was noted in the paper so here it is. We all hope you had a great day, Matt!

TURNING FIVE

Also, another special young man celebrating birthday number five is Jake Johnson. Jake is so excited to have reached this great milestone and I am sure that this next year will be a fun and exciting one for him.

Jake, along with his mom Debbie, dad Jeff and little sister Abbey will enjoy his special day and know that so many people are thinking of him and sending him a very Happy Birthday wish! Happy Birthday, Jake-A-Do!

BC HIGH HONORS

Christopher J. Carr, David F. Crowley-Buck, Christopher P. Barber and Andrew J. Flynn achieved High Honors for the second quarter at Boston College High School. For High Honors a student must have at least a 3.8 quality point average. Edward M. Chase achieved honors, earning at least a 3.2 QPA.

Boston College High School is a Jesuit, Catholic, college-preparatory school for young men founded in 1863. The school enrolls approximately 1200 students from some 80 communities in eastern Massachusetts.

VACATION WEEK

I want to wish all of our school children and staffs of schools everywhere a fantastic vacation week! Although we have a definite lack of snow, which makes some people extremely happy and others of us, really frustrated, whatever it is that everyone is doing, enjoy it! Take the time to look, listen and hear all of the little things that happen throughout the week. Whether you are at home, skiing or away on a vacation in the sun, take the time to enjoy it for the little things, that is what memories are made of.

PRESIDENTIAL SCHOLAR

Megan McCain, a senior at Cohasset High, has been named one of 2,600 candidates in the Presidential Scholars Program. The candidates were selected from nearly 2.8 million students expected to graduate from high school this year.

Megan was selected on the basis of her superior academic and artistic achievements, leadership qualities, strong character and involvement in school and community activities.

The 2,600 candidates were also selected for their exceptional performance on the SATs, and their essays, school transcripts and recommendations.

A distinguished panel of educators will review the submissions and select 500 semifinalists in early April.

Then just one young man and woman from each state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and US students living abroad, 20 students at-large and up to 20 students from the creative and performing arts will be selected by a group of eminent citizens appointed by President Bush. Those students will be invited to Washington, DC, for several days in June to receive the Presidential Scholars Medallion.

Megan is the daughter of Tom and Joyce McCain.

Congratulations, Megan!

EXCELLENT!

Family and friends would like to congratulate Karen Nahill for being awarded the distinguished "Partners In Excellence" Award from Massachusetts General Hospital. She was presented this honor in recognition of her outstanding performance and commitment to excellence. Karen is now celebrating her 20th year of nursing at Mass. General. This honor is a wonderful one indeed and definitely well-deserved. Congratulations Karen.

QUILT SHOW

Would you like to spend an enjoyable day having a wonderful gourmet luncheon and viewing more than 50 handmade quilts, some that are centuries old? The Second Congregational Church is holding its ninth Annual Quilt Show & Luncheon on Saturday, March 2 from 10:30 a.m.-2 p.m. with tickets costing only $10 each. The proceeds from this popular event benefit The Boston Medical Center's Pediatric AIDS Charitable Trust and their Reach Out and Read Program. For tickets to this event, send a check to the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, MA 02025 or stop in the church office between the hours of 9:00-1:00, M-F. For more information, call 781-383-0345

GARDENERS SERVE TEA

The annual tea for residents of the Cohasset Knoll nursing home will take place on Tuesday, Feb. 19 at 2 p.m. and is conducted each February, by the Amateur Gardeners of Cohasset. Light refreshments will be served to the Cohasset Knoll residents by club members.

ART AWARD

I would like to end this column with a note about a very talented young lady. Miss Emma Grinnell, a ninth-grade student at the Cohasset High/Middle School was recently the recipient of the Silver Key Award in the Boston Globe Scholastic Arts Awards for her giant puppet mask. This is a tremendous honor and effort and I am sure the town will join in the congratulations for this award. Emma's family and friends are so proud of her as well as her classmates and teachers at school. Fantastic news to hear, Emma!

Acting is still fun after 50 years

'Our Town' premiers March 1 at Town Hall

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

As the Cohasset Dramatic Club prepares for "Our Town" in early March — Lou Eaton readies himself to participate in his 18th play, spanning more than 50 years in the theatrical company.

Eaton first acted with the troupe in 1948 and hasn't stopped since. In "Our Town," Eaton portrays Constable Warren.

"They say every successful trial lawyer is a ham actor."

Look for Lou Eaton in the Cohasset Dramatic Club upcoming production of "Our Town."

"The reason they want me to play that role is because they needed an old guy," Eaton joked.

Eaton said the presence of a dramatic club in Cohasset is something he really enjoys about the town. He said while most sizable, suburban towns have a dramatic club, there are more than enough people in Cohasset to support one.

"To people who love to act it's their only outlet," he said. "There just aren't enough professional jobs out there."

Eaton credits his acting skill to being a trial lawyer for more than 40 years. He said it enabled him to go on stage without fear and has allowed him to feel secure while speaking.

"They say every successful trial lawyer is a ham actor," Eaton said.

While Eaton enjoys the acting, he said it's the people he meets while performing that makes the drama club so much fun.

"Theatre people are a race apart," he said. "They're so eccentric and they always keep me on my toes."

Eaton believes a play is an important part of society and thinks more children should get involved with acting. He said most plays aim to make a difference in people's lives, or to make them think about what they just saw.

"Most TV is just humor, or sex, or both," he said. "Plays try to convey a message, they try to make people use their minds."

Eaton has spent a lot of time at rehearsals in the past month attending one about every other day. In the week before the play, the schedule calls for rehearsals every day.

"It's a huge time commitment," he said. "That's why you have to love it so much."

Jean DiGiacomandrea, president of the Cohasset Dramatic Club and participant in the play, said the current play is one the club rallied behind. She said originally, the club wanted to perform a comedy but in the wake of Sept. 11, decided to produce, "a classic American production that was appropriate for this time in our country's history."

The story of "Our Town" takes places in Grovers Corners, N.H. in the early 1900s. Described by DiGiacomandrea as a very simple and innocent play, it follows the families of the town through life, marriage and death.

She said the goal with this production is to remind people to cherish the value of the everyday routine that makes up our lives. The cast of 22 ranges in age from nine to 84 and hails from Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

Eaton is no stranger to donating his time and energy to the town. He has served on numerous town boards including as chairman of the Advisory Board and Transportation Committee in the 60s. Eaton served as town counsel in 1955 and is currently on the Town History Committee which is busy publishing the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III".

"The committee I'm on now has to be the most fun I've ever had," Eaton said. "They're all so full of energy I actually look forward to our meetings."

"Our Town" opens Friday, March 1 and will run for three weekends. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, Front Street Books in Scituate and at the door, or by phone at 781-585-9158.

Flags to fly at memorial to Gold Star Mothers

The Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee announced American Flags would fly at the Gold Star Mothers Memorial on the anniversaries of the days when Cohasset lost soldiers in World War I, World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

"Cohasset lost 22 men in the wars of the 20th century and we feel this is a way for the town to make a living, ongoing tribute to their memory," said Glenn A. Pratt, chairman of the Veterans Memorial Committee. The citizens of Cohasset built and dedicated a memorial to the 22 Gold Star Mothers at the new Woodside Cemetery in 2001. The 100-foot crescent shaped memorial features a polished white granite mother stone surrounded by 22 individual polished stones, each stone representing the mother of a Cohasset serviceman who made the supreme sacrifice in service to his country.

The flags will fly 20 days during the year on the dates Cohasset lost men.

The flags will fly 20 days during the year on the dates Cohasset lost men, two made the supreme sacrifice on Feb. 25, according to Pratt. The Cohasset DPW, Tree, Cemetery and Park Department foreman, Andy Swanson, has agreed to have the flags raised on the 21 days each year.

"The monument is at the new cemetery and we are honored to be entrusted with such an important responsibility," Swanson said.

The flags will be flown at least one day each month of the year, except June and September, months in which no Cohasset servicemen lost their lives.

During World War I in 1918 and Vietnam in 1969, Cohasset paid the heaviest price for freedom with the loss of five men in each of those years, followed by three in 1944 and two in 1945.

In their ongoing efforts to honor Cohasset veterans, the committee plans to ask the annual Town Meeting in March for $15,000 to make repairs to the various existing veterans' memorials in town. The people of Cohasset have always responded with enthusiasm to any request to honor their veterans, Pratt said. After each conflict, Cohasset has dedicated squares and parks to the men who lost their lives. Some of the memorials have been in place since 1920 and need repair, he said. Over the years some have become encroached and not maintained, as is the case at Norman Todd Park and Peter Cogill Square. In the case of Howard Gleason and Allen Buffum the memorial markers have disappeared altogether.

"We owe it to the families to put these places back to their original prominence" Pratt said.

The Veterans Memorial Committee has begun to plan for a Korea and Vietnam honor roll at Veterans Park at the harbor. Work on the memorial is not expected to begin until 2004.

Auditions slated for Hull musical

Hull Performing Arts announces open auditions for the musical "Pump Boys and Dinettes" by John Foley, Mark Hardwick, Debra Monk, Cass Morgan, John Schimmel and Jim Wann.

This musical tribute to life by the roadside takes place at a gas station on Highway 57. Across the street is an eatery called the "Double Cupp Diner." The four guys at the station have been known to do some auto repairs, but only when aided by quantities of time and beer. The Cupp sisters celebrate their home cooking with the same zeal they bring to being neighborly with the boys.

The show will be directed by Simpson Moore and the musical director will be Kathy Clancy.

The auditions are on Sunday, March 3, and Thursday, March 10, at 7:30 p.m. at the Anne Scully Senior Center, 197A Samoset Ave., Hull. Bring a song to sing. "Pump Boys and Dinettes" will be cast with three men and three women. Call 781-925-2406 for directions and more information about the show.

This project is sponsored, in part, by a grant from the Hull Cultural Council, a local agency supported by the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Words from the heart

Valentine's Day is celebrated on Feb. 14 and who can miss the sea of red, pink and white greeting cards in the stores, not to mention the blitz of advertisements for flowers, candy, perfume, wine and maybe a trip to the Bahamas — oh, sure.

Words of love and passion have been spoken down through the ages, sometimes changing the course of history but always serving to remind us that as humans, "We are all born for love. It is the principle of existence, and its only end." (Benjamin Disraeli, Sibyl)

If you are at a loss for words (or gifts) on Valentine's Day, here are some famous quotations about romance, gleaned from literary websites, sure to impress your loved one.

For aught that I could ever read, Could ever hear by tale or history, The course of true love never did run smooth. (William Shakespeare, A Midsummer's Night Dream)

I feel it when I sorrow most: It is better to have loved and lost, Than never to have loved at all. (Alfred, Lord Tennyson, In Memoriam)

All is fair in love and war. (Francais Edward Smedley, Frank Fairleigh)

Heaven has no rage like love to hatred turned, Nor hell a fury like a woman scorned. (William Congreve, The Mourning Bride)

Will you still love me when I'm sixty-four? (Paul McCartney)

Nobody has ever measured, even poets, how much a heart can hold. (Zelda Fitzgerald)

The greatest happiness of life is the conviction that we are loved — loved for ourselves, or rather, loved in spite of ourselves. (Victor Hugo)

What the world needs now, is love sweet love.

Love reckons hours for months, and days for years; And every little absence is an age. (John Dryden, Amphitryon)

They do not love, that do not show their love. (John Heywood, Proverbs)

Love's a thing that's never out of season. (Barry Cornwall)

Love does not consist of gazing at each other, but in looking together in the same direction. (Antoine de Saint-Exupery.)

In dreams and in love, there are no impossibilities. (Janos Arany)

All mankind loves a lover. (Ralph Waldo Emerson, Love)

Happy Valentine's Day!

Cultural grants are available

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund and Rep. Garrett J. Bradley announced the guidelines for the Massachusetts Cultural Council's Endowment Grant Program for Cultural Organizations are now available on the Massachusetts Cultural Council's (MCC) Web site at:

www.massculturalcouncil.org/endowment.html

Applicants seeking FY 02 funding must submit draft applications by March 27, and final proposals are due April 29.

The Endowment Grant Program combines grants and technical assistance to organizations considering the creation or expansion of endowments. Applicants are required to demonstrate a track record of financial stability, a strong capacity for fundraising, adequate financial resources to deal with cyclical cash flow needs and sufficient resources to carry out their programs and maintain their facilities.

Grants in this program are highly competitive and a list of previously funded applicants is available online at:

www.massculturalcouncil.org/grants/for_organizations/funding/endow_funding.html.

For more information about the program, contact MCC program coordinator Janna Berkman at janna.berkman@art.state.ma.us or 617-727-3668 ext. 269.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Differing opinions on Osgood 'spoof'

TO THE EDITOR:

I was compelled to write a response to your article and the letter from Claudia and Andrew Quigley on racial stereotyping at the Osgood School.

By reading the two overviews of the incident, the only thing an outsider can look at is the aftermath. Both the school officials and the Quigleys had different opinions on how "Bubba Smith" sounded on the public address system.

In the end, the Quigleys talked about sensitivity training for school staff. However, School Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey viewed the issue as an "overreaction to a spoof" and went on to say, "we're not going to close down shop because one person has a reaction."

My concern is that when there is a racial concern to be addressed by the town school system, will the response be as School Committee Chairperson Stephanie Noble stated that, "everyone has a right to their opinion" and move on with the business of educating students. It was said that "Bubba" was made up on the spur of the moment by a teacher. The school syllabus is not put together that way. Racial offense may not have been intended, but stereotyping could have been implied, by the mere fact of putting a black person with a Southern dialect. Let's be consistent with students.

Osgood teacher unfairly targeted

TO THE EDITOR:

I was extremely disappointed to read in last week's Cohasset Mariner, both an article and letter-to-the-editor about supposed racial stereotyping. Mr. Dykas is a highly regarded and extremely well liked member of the Osgood School faculty. He is also an excellent role model to all the students in that school.

Anybody could write an inflammatory, rambling and could be slanderous letter-to-the-editor. It seems to me that it is up to the editor to make a judgment call as to whether the subject of the letter has any merit. I ask you, who among us would like to be a target of what borders yellow journalism as seen in the headline: Racial stereotyping at Osgood School?

Mr. Dykas has unfairly become the target of one parent's wrath and the actions of a newspaper that chose to print a copy of an outrageous letter and an unnecessary article. I hope that the next time someone makes such a strong accusation, the Mariner thinks twice about the way they handle it. Nobody should have their name dragged through the mud in that manner.

Isabel Blackburn

Osgood does an exemplary job

TO THE EDITOR:

It is so upsetting to see such a great institution erroneously maligned. Last week you ran a letter-to-the-editor that hurt a school that has done an exemplary job of educating our children. As a parent and substitute teacher at the Joseph Osgood School, I was stunned at the accusations made by a Cohasset family last week. Both my husband and I have been very involved in the Osgood School and I personally am there a couple days per week. I am compelled to respond and state what I have experienced and seen firsthand.

First, I wish to say that the teachers and administration are some of the most dedicated and committed individuals to our children's education that I have witnessed. As an institution, the school has an outstanding reputation and does an excellent job exceeding the state requirements. Our children receive a first class well-rounded education, which includes diversity education.

We would like to make several points. First, Mrs. Sheehan when not in the classrooms is always available in the office. When announcements are made each morning, she is always in the office having just greeted our children on their bus arrivals at the front door. Whenever I am in the building — teaching, helping or visiting — I constantly see Mrs. Sheehan. She always has a smile on her face and is one of the most approachable people I know. She has provided the school with leadership and has instilled a passion for excellence within the teachers and students. To that note, I must comment on the morning announcements, which I have heard countless times. Every person who has been in charge of leading morning announcements has done so with utmost professionalism and enthusiasm. Mr. Dykas has done many of these announcements and I can assure they have a positive impact on all. They have never been racially insensitive or hurtful. Additionally, I would like to compliment Mr. Dykas as an excellent teacher and a role model for my child.

This past year has been a wonderful experience for us and I am extremely grateful to the staff at the Osgood School. The children are enthusiastic learners and the teachers have a passion to teach them. What a wonderful combination.

The letter suggested that the Osgood teachers take sensitivity training. My experience is just the opposite. As parents we were very surprised at the emphasis the school was placing on inclusion and acceptance. My child is very familiar with Hanukkah and Kwanzaa and has written more than one story on Martin Luther King.

I would strongly suggest that before anyone publicly criticizes an outstanding institution, like the Osgood School, they get involved and educate themselves. Hurtful and insensitive speech based on just a few minutes of experience hurts the institution and the town.

Quigley's letter

TO THE EDITOR:

In response to Claudia and Andrew Quigley's letter to the editor, in the Feb. 7 Cohasset Mariner, it should be noted that the Quigleys chose to respond to an incident at the Joseph Osgood School in an overblown and sensationalist manner. This over-the-top reaction could have been ignored except for the shameful fact that a widely respected teacher at the Osgood School had a serious allegation leveled against him by the Quigleys and was given no opportunity to explain or even to possibly apologize for his alleged misstep.

Without going into the details of the incident yet again, it is fair to say that anyone who is upset or offended by a teacher's conduct should report that conduct to the principal. A meeting to discuss the matter should take place with the employee, the principal and the person(s) who have registered the complaint present. It is my understanding that Mr. Quigley informed Janet Sheehan, the Osgood principal, that his wife does not like confrontation, thus eliminating this course of action. The Quigleys' decision to play out their accusations in the court of public opinion left the teacher cast in the unenviable role of the accused with absolutely no recourse to defend himself. The Quigleys' response also precluded any opportunity for Mrs. Sheehan or any member of the Osgood faculty to demonstrate that the pursuit of diversity and tolerance is alive and well at the Joseph Osgood School.

Whether or not the children interpreted the teacher's comments as racist is beside the point. When any faculty member is accused of misconduct, it is necessary that the matter be handled in a fair and appropriate manner. It is an understatement to conclude that playing this matter out in the local press was neither fair nor appropriate. Instead of working toward a resolution, the Quigleys chose to call attention to themselves and lecture the community on the issue of race.

Changing faces at circulation

FROM THE LIBRARY

SHEILA EVANS

For more than 30 years, the Friends of the Cohasset Library has organized a loyal band of women and men to staff the circulation desk at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Although Cohasset's library has been unique in using volunteers in this way, the group has proved wonderfully efficient and reliable and as individuals, have created a friendly and welcoming "face" to the public. Their volunteer hours have also saved taxpayers the equivalent of more than a full-time staff person. Now a complicated new computer system makes once-a-week use impossible.

The Old Colony Library Network, of which Cohasset is a member library, has taken a giant step forward with the installation of a powerful computer circulation system. SIRSI, as it is called, can keep track of every aspect of its 25-member libraries' card holders, holdings, loan, holds, overdues, inter-library loans, and more. On many counts, it will provide superior library service to the South Shore for many years to come.

It has been very difficult, however, for staff, patrons and volunteers to learn to use. Part of the difficulty is because SIRSI is not only new, but it uses a mouse and icons, whereas the old system used typed instructions. Patrons using the "catalog" computers have needed, and will continue to need help getting used to this change. They are encouraged to ask staff to explain anything they don't understand or to sign up for the classes currently being offered.

Now a complicated new computer system makes once-a-week use impossible.

The major difficulty, however, is the variety of options available on the computer at the circulation desk, as each patron presents a slightly different situation: for instance, "I took two books out on Jan. 10, one of which I can't find, and I guess the other is overdue. Then I took three books out on the 25th and I am returning two and want to renew the other." SIRSI can handle this situation exceptionally well, and the library staff, after more than two months of daily use, has overcome the challenge of using SIRSI to record the correct data for each of those books.

The SIRSI program, however, is too complicated to use comfortably only once a week. Most of the library's volunteers make the generous commitment of three hours every week, but with that lapse of time, it means pretty much starting all over again with SIRSI. The trustees and Janet Husband, the library director, have concluded that it is unfair to ask the volunteers to staff the desk under these circumstances. Fortunately, there are many other volunteer jobs at the library that they or others may enjoy doing, although they perhaps lack the appeal of helping the public so directly.

The library, on behalf of Cohasset, would like to thank all the volunteers who have staffed the circulation desk so ably for 30 years, and particularly those who have been most recently working there: Bob Davenport, Carole Anne Dean, Alice Hall, Mary Hartwell, June Hubbard, Ozzie Ingram, Iku Ishihara, Susan Kent, Shirley Marten, Mary Ann Ward and Kitty Whitley. It has been a job well done!

Sheila S. Evans is a member of the Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

It must be puppy love

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

There was a new arrival at our house the other day.

No, not that — but thanks for thinking it anyway.

The new arrival is a puppy, seven weeks old and not quite as housebroken as the previous owner thought or was willing to tell. We've named her "Jedi," for reasons that escape me.

A number of things about dogs escape me, including the frequently asked question: "Why?"

Everybody goes whoopee over Jedi in spite of her bladder infirmities. Our living room is knee deep in chew toys. My son has her future planned in detail, including, I think, a couple of years at Harvard.

He takes her to work with him in the morning, where his fellow workers, I am told, go whoopee over her. He takes her for a walk in the evening, where his fellow strollers, I am told, go whoopee over her.

The only one who seems to have maintained her sanity through this whole mess is our senior cat, Rumer, who curls up in a chair, well out of reach, and views Jedi's actions with wary curiosity and disgust.

As you may have guessed, I am not a dog person. I prefer cats. You've probably heard it said that "it's a dog's life" or "going to the dogs." When have you ever heard of anyone "going to the cats?"

I was firmly in Bill Clinton's corner when Socks was the First Kitty. Then Bill lost me, not because of Monica Lewinsky, but because Buddy replaced Socks and became the First Puppy.

You don't have to take care of cats and they want it that way. All they ask is a dish of Nine Lives and a place where they stalk off to take care of business. To me, that independence is admirable.

Dogs, on the other hand, need constant care that some would call pampering. Thank goodness we haven't reached that stage at our house yet. But something tells me we will. It's the way the chew toy bounces.

Just down the road from our house in Weymouth, a fellow named Bill Schlieff is offering day care for dogs whose owners have to go to work in places where dogs are still thought of as just plain animals.

Schlieff's Doggieritaville Resort and Day Care has even installed a camcorder so concerned dog owners can check on their "children" via the Internet on company computers while they work.

All it costs is $13 a day or as much as $30 if you want Fido — or more likely Phydeaux, as Avi Nelson called his dog — picked up at the house and returned, probably by limousine.

Incidentally, you can't call yourself a dog-owner if you live in Boulder, Colo. The city council there has adopted an animal code that labels humans as pet "guardians," rather than owners.

The Four Seasons Hotel in Chicago serves a gourmet meal called "The Tail Wagger," shredded braised beef and steamed rice, to dogs for a mere $8 plus tip and in San Francisco . . .

Oops! I have to go now. Jedi just came into the room and I don't want her to think I've been ranking on her.

Actions test faith in church leaders

MY VIEW

MARK SKALA

Two fellow journalists were in the newsroom late last week as the tragic story about priests and sexual abuse made more headlines.

"Aren't you glad we're Jewish," one said to the other, half-jokingly.

The comment resonated with me throughout the day as news accounts detailed additional priests — several with South Shore ties — allegedly molesting innocent and vulnerable children. It made me sick.

My Catholic faith is deeply rooted. It has sustained me during difficult times and it has given me great solace to be a member of this community we call Catholic. Faith and Catholic beliefs were ingrained in me from the very beginning.

My parents are devout Catholics (the fact they have 15 children should be the first clue) and practice their beliefs with conviction. We all went to Catholic schools from grade one on up and one of my siblings proudly serves in a religious order. Our home was filled with symbols of our faith — the crucifix, a statue of the Pieta, and pictures of Jesus. My parents are not zealots, they go about their faith in quiet and unassuming ways, although in his old age my dad is lovingly called the preacher man by my mother because he is often found reading his prayer book.

So it is with that backdrop I am reflecting on all that has happened in the past month or so in the Boston Archdiocese. To say I am disappointed and feel betrayed is an understatement. I know I am not alone when I say many of my fellow Catholics believe those priests who have been committing these heinous acts — and the church leaders who covered them up — have done serious damage to our community of believers. In particular, I am devastated by the arrogance of Cardinal Law and how all of this was handled under his leadership. He and his subordinates were more concerned about protecting the church than they were in helping and healing.

Cardinal Law is quoted this week in the newspaper as saying, "A bishop is not a corporate executive. He's not a politician. The relationship to the church he serves is something different."

Something different indeed.

Yet his actions say otherwise. By shuffling priests around, knowing they had a pattern of serious allegations against them, makes him no better than an Enron executive who benefited while the company was headed for bankruptcy.

I believe Cardinal Law has seriously and irreparably damaged his relationship with his faithful. At first, I rejected the notion he should resign, that it would not be best for the Archdiocese. But since so much has come out in recent weeks regarding his leadership, or lack thereof on this issue, I am now convinced he must resign.

This crisis in the church is not going away. And it shouldn't; too many victims have suffered greatly at the hands of a minority of men to whom we entrust so much. But for the sake of all the dedicated, caring and loving priests and religious who toil for the goodness of God, Cardinal Law must move on. Enough with the apologies. As Catholics know, it is one thing to be repentant, but you must show it. I find his words hollow now when he talks of "protecting the children."

I know many, many priests and religious who do what they do because they love their God and care about helping others. How unfortunate they must endure the whispered comments and questions from their flock about how this could rise to the level it has.

Now the Archdiocese is "outing" anyone suspected of alleged incidents. Some of the priests named in recent days have one charge leveled against them. Please don't mistake me, any incident is unacceptable and cause for outrage, but the Archdiocese seems to be jumping the gun now to cover itself. How thorough was the one allegation investigated? The pastor at one of the churches didn't even get contacted about the priest until it appeared in the paper.

To me, this all points to the Archdiocese yet again mismanaging this crisis. It is all reactionary. There will be some allegations unfounded because some twisted individuals want to get at the church. Believe me, I don't make this comment with blinders on about my church. I fully recognize the damage that has been done. I do, however, question some motives as this issue spirals out of control.

Cardinal Law believes he is the spiritual leader to set the Archdiocese back on the right course and help the community heal. He sounds genuine, but it is a little too late. I believe the Catholic church is strong and will weather and even grow from this crisis if we have faith in those who lead us. A resounding number of area Catholics are questioning if Cardinal Law is that leader. I am one of them.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Osgood school gets high marks

TO THE EDITOR:

Last week, a letter was published from the Quigley Family in which they portrayed a teacher at the Osgood School, as well as the entire administrative of the Osgood School, as insensitive professionals. I vehemently disagree with the Quigleys' portrayal.

Our experience has been a most positive one. From the new Principal, Janet Sheehan, throughout the entire Osgood staff, we have seen positive portrayals of divergent ethnicities, religious preferences, and physical education. The Osgood staff has demonstrated the ability to show our children the importance of Martin Luther King Day, Hanukah, Christmas, and Kwanzaa. The Osgood staff has helped our children understand the physical and emotional differences that reside within our community and have never wavered in their presentation of acceptance of differences within the community. The Osgood staff, that we know, has never exhibited anything other than the up most respect and care for each individual child that is placed in their care while remembering that, after all, these children are our greatest pride and joy.

We take great exception to the Quigley letter and see it as an attempt to garner attention for themselves. It's motivation as well as it's content must be questioned. If it is an attempt to persuade residents of Cohasset of some great failing at the Osgood School, it fails miserably.

We remain deeply committed to the Osgood School and its staff and wish to commend them for the fine job that they have been doing.

Teacher supported

TO THE EDITOR:

I am not in the habit of writing letters to the editor (this is my first and probably last) but Claudia and Andrew Quigley's very public letter to the School Committee compels me to write for two reasons: first, they have wrongly accused and embarrassed a respected teacher who deserves our thanks, not the Quigleys' condemnation; and second, a clarion call of racism where there was none weakens the message and dilutes a community's effort to combat it.

As someone raised in a school system to which integration came late, I have seen racism in school. What happened over the loudspeaker at the Joseph Osgood School just before the Super Bowl — and more to the point, what was meant by the teacher involved — was not it. Not even close.

I do not know the Quigleys and I'm sure their motives were good. Yet, accusations of racism, especially when leveled loudly and publicly against a teacher, must only be made responsibly, based on accurate facts, a full understanding of the context, and after a sincere attempt to discern that individual's true intent. No matter how noble the cause, if the means to promote it are not fair — then the end is not just.

In these troubled and troubling times, we need to work together constructively, to give each other the benefit of doubt, and to look for what is real and true. By that yardstick, the Quigleys' letter falls well short.

I, with many, fully support the Osgood teacher who was the unfortunate target of the Quigley's letter; applaud Principal Sheehan's handling of this matter; and feel lucky to have our children under their good care.

Absurd notion

DEAR SCHOOL COMMITTEE MEMBERS:

I felt compelled to write you after reading Ms. Quigley's open letter in the Cohasset Mariner.

While it is unfortunate that Ms. Quigley felt "shocked and outraged" by Mr. Dykas' morning announcement on the Osgood School's PA system, it has been my experience after 22 years in radio and television (dealing almost daily with people who are "shocked and outraged" by what they think they have heard) that during an activity as passive as listening to the radio, or in this case, a P.A. system, people are not fully attentive and prone to read into those broadcasts many things that were never intended or even implied. Quite often in a case where a listener perceives racism, it is actually a reflection of that listener's own hypersensitivity to race they are hearing; which is, itself, a subtle form of racism.

With respect to Mr. Dykas, I did not hear the announcement in question, but my daughter graduated from the Osgood School last year, and I have it on good authority that in the past Mr. Dykas' announcements were never racially insensitive, and in fact often entertaining.

Antoine Smith is from Montgomery, Ala., so it would be a safe bet that his fictional brother "Bubba" would have a southern accent. Perhaps Ms. Quigley has a problem with Mr. Dykas' voice in general, as she characterized it as "unpleasant" on her answering machine, but to say that a southern accent is akin to a "minstrel show" is nothing but bigoted sentiment with absolutely no understanding of cultural differences.

While Ms. Quigley should be applauded for being a well-intentioned white person speaking on behalf of African-Americans everywhere, I would urge you view it with a grain of salt. If she feels the need to seek training from the Anti-Defamation League to help her overcome the absurd notion that a southern accent is demeaning to any one race, she should be commended on her commitment to self-improvement, but as I am a parent of children in the Cohasset school system, I truly feel your energies could be better spent in other areas, rather than chastising a teacher for trying to make the drudgery of morning announcements fun for the students.

Logan litigation

MR. PETER WOOD
77 SUMMER ST.
DEAR PETER:

It appears that our Selectmen have now concluded, based on Ralph Dormitzer's presentation last Tuesday, that Cohasset already has a serious jet noise and pollution problem, which is expected to worsen if runway 14/32 is built. The data we use to forecast 80,000-plus additional flights a year over the town is Massport's own data, not ours. They freely admit to a strategy of dumping all additional flights, and noise, on the South Shore, as we "are less densely populated than other areas." Less powerful politically, I might add.

We have no interest in a lawsuit, for its own sake, either. It can indeed be expensive. The only saving grace is that the cost will be shared four ways with other towns if Cohasset decides to join in. Also, we can bow out at any time, since we are not the plaintiff — Hull is.

After retaining the best available experts, we have concluded that the data Massport used in its environmental analysis is both incomplete and misleading. This is all we have to prove in court, as the California action, Berkley Keep Jets Over the Bay Committee, et al. v. Board of Port Commissioners proves. In finding against the Port of Oakland, the Court indicated that the EIR:

- failed to analyze adequately the noise impacts from planned additional nighttime flights
- erred in using outdated information in assessing the emission of toxic air contaminants (TACs) from jet aircraft
- failed to support its decision not to evaluate the health risks associated with the emission of TACs with meaningful analysis.

These Aug. 30, 2001, findings, which have nothing to do with fraud, are 30 pages long. Please let me know if you would like a copy.

We would all like to find a solution which does not require litigation. We have complained on the noise complaint line. We have sent countless letters. We have met many times with our political representatives. Mr. Thomas Kinton, the acting head of Massport, responded with an opinion piece in the Mariner last June, calling us a small band of activists intent on distorting the record for our own purposes.

An analysis of "the record," using Massport's own data, is found in our 350-page EIR response, on which the lawsuit is based. As part of our findings, we discovered that Massport failed to even do an air quality analysis! Astonishing!

Because citizens have no power over airports and air traffic, operators such as Massport have no incentive to dialogue. They know full well that the external costs of an expanded system are not being accounted for, and understandably do not want to talk because it will cost them money. The general attitude is that a small portion of the population has to be disadvantaged for the greater good. It is too bad, in their opinion, but a result of having the benefits of living in an economically advanced society. The small portion of the population happens to be Cohasset — and Hingham — and Hull. They have us right in their sights.

What we truly fear is the lengthening of runway 14/32, once it is built, to accommodate larger jets, which will increase capacity of the airport to 180 jets per hour from the 90-110 that can be accommodated now. The FAA minimum for regional jets is 6,000 feet. 14/32 is 5,000 feet. They know full well they will have to extend it, once built.

As Ralph indicated, we are already being screwed over, subject to 50 percent of all Logan traffic for the entire Boston area. Some people are leaving town. Real estate agents report losing sales when prospects hear the jets roaring overhead. And it is Massport's very clear intent to keep it up. There is no jet noise in 60-70 percent of the Greater Boston area. Cohasset has been targeted to make sure it stays that way.

If you can think of a way to resolve this situation without a lawsuit, we would be pleased to hear about it.

Editor's note: Mr. Oddleifson provided the Mariner with a copy of his letter to Mr. Wood who read a statement to selectmen last week asking they not support the Town Meeting article asking for $30,000 to defray a portion of the legal costs to fight the runway.

Whose nest is it, anyway?

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

He who would study birds' nests must look for them in November and in winter...for then the trees are bare and he can see them, and the swamps and streams are frozen and he can approach new kinds. He will often be surprised to find how many have haunted where he little suspected.
— Henry David Thoreau
Journal

I've fallen into a bad habit of late. While driving around town or riding my bike, I find myself looking not where I'm going, but up into the bare branches of trees and side to side into tangles of briars and shrubs in search of birds' nests. What was so carefully hidden in summer's lush foliage is now conspicuous (along with the leaf nests of squirrels and the paper nests of hornets) in the bare deciduous trees, tucked into the forks, sitting precariously out on heavy limbs, and bending the tips of slender branches.

Oriole
Tear drop-shaped pouch, with bulging bottom and oval entrance. Woven of plant fibers, yarn, string and bark. Measures about five inches long. Found suspended at tips of drooping branches of shade trees from six to 60 feet off the ground.

I can't quite put my finger on why I find nests so appealing. Perhaps it is some mystical power in their form. Perhaps it is their craftsmanship, that they are at once sturdy yet graceful, useful yet artful, or that within them fragile gems of nature, filled with the miracle of life, wait to be hatched. Perhaps it is simply that in the barrenness of trees and the bleakness of winter, to stumble upon this symbol of spring is to have oneself renewed.

Contrary to popular belief, birds do not live in their nests, but build them only to provide a safe nursery for eggs to incubate and hatchlings to grow their wings. Once baby birds have fledged, nests are generally abandoned. Most backyard birds will not reuse an old nest, though they will return to an area that has provided them with nesting materials, food, water and safety. Some birds, for instance the vireo, occasionally use the materials from a previous year's nest to build a new nest.

Though all active nests, eggs and young are now protected by state and federal laws, it was not all that long ago that humans numbered among the songbirds' predators. The collecting of active nests and eggs, a branch of ornithology called oology, was as popular a pastime during the early years of the 20th century as birdwatching is today. For some, it was a serious study; for many a young country lad who spent sultry afternoons scouring woodlands for "rare birds," a favorite hobby.

Ornithologists and young would-be ornithologists carefully assembled display boxes that included nests as well as intricately patterned eggs that were prepared for presentation by piercing their ends with a pencil and blowing out the contents. Defenders of the oology mania argued that many of the bird species whose nests and eggs were collected were overpopulated, that birds could easily rebuild their nests and lay subsequent clutches of eggs, and that the hands-on study of nests and eggs aided ornithological research. Still, the taking of nests and eggs, like the "taking" of birds for plumage and for the epicurean's table, took a toll on bird populations and by the 1920s the practice was prohibited by law.

Cardinal
Loosely and carelessly constructed deep cup of small twigs, bark strips rootlets and leaves lined with grass or animal hair. Usually found close to the ground in thickets, tangles and vines.

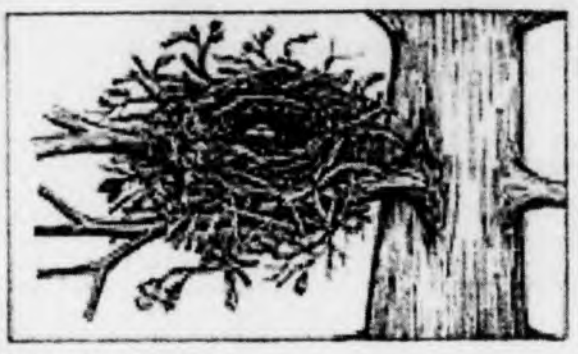
A modern and curious version of oology is still practiced in Southeast Asia where the cup-shaped, translucent nests of white-nest swiftlets are big business. Adhered high on the walls and ceilings of dark caves, the nests are made from the swiftlets' pure glutinous saliva. Spaghetti-like when fresh, the saliva firms to the consistency of meringue when exposed to air. Nest gatherers climb precarious bamboo ladders to reach the nests which are removed with a special — said to be magical — tool. Blended with chicken broth, the nests make "bird nest soup," an extravagant delicacy in China where it is considered a powerful aphrodisiac and rejuvenating medicine. Attempts by Western nations and animal activists to curb the over harvesting of nests and the mass destruction of hatchlings have so far failed. Closer to home, our common chimney swift also uses its saliva to construct its nest, but unlike the white-nest swiftlet, the chimney swift's saliva is merely a "glue" to hold a framework of twigs together.

Catbird
Bulky, loose mass of twigs, stems and leaves lined with softer plant material. Measures about six inches in diameter and is well concealed in a dense bush or tangle of vines.

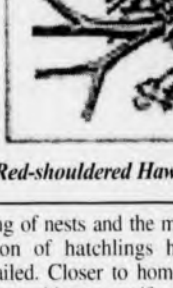
Fortunately for our backyard songbirds, there is little demand for their nests and most stay right where they were built — until the elements take their toll - for curious nest peepers to enjoy. And what peepers will notice once they start looking is the wide range of nest sizes, shapes, materials and locations.

No typical nest

There is no typical nest and unless one is fortunate enough to witness a bird's comings and goings during the summer, nest identification isn't easy, even under the best of conditions. Some nests are found on the ground, others 60 feet up. Matching the muddy mounds, the sloppy stacks of sticks, the bags, baskets and cups to their rightful owners — especially if the nests have been damaged by wind and rain — can present a challenge, even for the seasoned peeper. Many birds make nests that look similar to one another and that are too high in trees to be closely inspected for the tell-tale "ingredients" that might help identify their builders. Still, knowing a few things about how and why birds nest can help even the casual observer "read the nests."



Red-shouldered Hawk nest



Goldfinch
Compact, tidy cup measuring about three inches in diameter and made of fine grasses, bark strips and moss lined with thistle down. Placed in the upright fork of a bush or small tree.

Ornithologists group nests in several categories. Cavity nests, the safest for birds because they are the most difficult for predators to enter, are those that are found in tree holes and in man-made houses and nooks. Woodpeckers, chickadees, wrens, bluebirds and nuthatches are a few of our common cavity nesters. Platform nests appear as flat piles of sticks, often high in the branches of trees or topping dead trees or poles. Platform nesters include herons and hawks. Adherent nests are built with mud or saliva and grasses and are attached to cliffs and walls and under overhangs. Barn swallows and chimney swifts build this kind of nest. Scrape nests, also known as ground nests, are shallow depressions on the ground, typical of many shorebirds such as gulls and terns.

Open cup nests, thought by ornithologists to have evolved from a shortage of natural cavities, are the largest group of nests and, in many cases, the most intricate and artful. They are also the nests most likely to be seen during a winter stroll around the neighborhood. Typically woven of twigs and leaves and lined with softer, plusher materials, these nests are found in the forks of trees, suspended from the tips of slender branches and in thickets of briars and marsh reeds. Robins, cardinals, blue jays, red-winged blackbirds, orioles, catbirds and goldfinches are just some of the open-cup nesters that regularly visit our backyards.

Red-Eyed Vireo
Cup-shaped and durable made of fine grasses, rootlets, bark strips and plant down and lined with bark strips and pine needles. Often decorated with lichens. Measures about three inches in diameter and is suspended in a forking, horizontal tree branch, usually five to 10 feet above the ground.

Mourning Dove
A loose, hollow platform of sticks and small twigs measuring about six inches in diameter. Found in lower branches of bushes, tangles and trees, particularly evergreens, occasionally on the ground.

To truly appreciate a bird's nest, it is worth considering the effort — the shaping, tying, weaving, molding, tamping and pulling — it takes to build one. With only the beak to carry nesting materials (though larger birds may also use their talons), backyard birds work from dawn to dusk, making thousands of trips back and forth, logging mile upon mile collecting (and recycling) natural and man-made materials, everything from flower petals, cellophane, spider webs, feathers, string, mud and wood chips to snake skins, candy wrappers, bark strips, animal hair, human hair and Easter basket grass. Largely an instinctive behavior, though "experienced" birds learn to make "better" nests, construction usually takes several days. Nest size is proportional to bird size. The bald eagle, for instance, with a wing span of more than seven feet, builds one of the largest nests. On the other hand, the ruby-throated hummingbird, a mere three inches long, constructs a, nest no bigger than half a golf ball.

Nest location

Nest location is species-specific and chosen to minimize predation. The Baltimore oriole suspends its firmly woven, wind-proof pouch from the extreme tips of delicate bowing branches that cannot support the weight of heavier predators. Nests built in the forks of trees where there is less concealing foliage typically belong to robins and jays that can aggressively defend their nests. Purple finches and hummingbirds build nests with materials that camouflage with the nest site. And cardinal and catbird nests, though often built close to the ground and seemingly vulnerable to predators, are tucked deep into impenetrable thickets of briars or vines so as to deter plunderers.

By assisting the birds with their gathering of nesting materials, you may be able to encourage them to set up house in your backyard. Use a mesh bag or suet holder and fill it with short pieces of yarn, thin strips of cloth, fabric softener sheets, tarpaulin or plastic bags, twigs, pine needles, cotton balls, feathers or pet hair. Robins and swallows will also appreciate a small mud puddle.

Woodpecker nest

Kingfisher nest

Barn swallow
Cup-shaped or cone-shaped. Built of mud mixed with grass and straw, lined with feathers. Measures about five inches in diameter and is found adhered to rafters, walls and under eaves and bridges.

For homeowners with backyard birdhouses, the annual cleaning will provide an opportunity to closely study the homes of cavity nesters. It is important to remember that cavity nesters — wrens, woodpeckers, titmice, nuthatches — will not build in shrubs or trees and open-cup nesters — robins, jays, cardinals, catbirds, orioles — will not build in birdhouses. A common mistake made by well intentioned people who find a nest that has fallen from a tree or one they think is sitting precariously on a limb or shelf is to place it "safely" in a birdhouse. Unfortunately, birds that naturally nest in the open will not look for their nests, eggs or young in a cavity. As is so often the case out there in the wild world, birds seem quite capable of surviving without a whole lot of interference from us.

Oriole nest

Robin
Bulky and cup-shaped with thick heavy inner molded wall of mud and coarse grasses, lined with fine grass. Measures about six inches in diameter. Found on horizontal branches, in forks or on open shelves from five to 30 feet above the ground.

Selectmen do about face on letter

CRC will continue to hold workshops

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

It's never too late to say you're sorry.

Selectmen voted to rescind a letter they sent to the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private company working in conjunction with the village task force, which asked it to cease holding public workshops on the harbor.

Selectman Merle Brown was disappointed the board had even written the letter.

"A lot of people are very happy with what's going on," he said. "I'm sorry I ever agreed to write that letter."

The letter was written earlier in the month in response to negative feedback the board received about a public workshop held on harbor improvements by the CRC. Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the board should have asked the CRC to come to a meeting before sending the letter.

"The letter has been characterized as anti-CRC, but that wasn't the intent," she said. "I just think we need to focus on the village before moving on to the harbor."

While the selectmen did agree the CRC could continue holding public hearings on harbor improvements, that didn't stop dozens of people coming to the meeting on Tuesday to weigh in on the issue.

Dick Karoff, 19 Border St., said CRC is unreceptive to changes that residents offer at the public workshops. While he feels there needs to be work done to the harbor area, he doesn't want the character of the harbor changed.

"We've seen no alternatives to wrought iron fences and fancy lighting," he said. "The CRC never listens to us."

Gail Whitehouse, 17 Ash St., was more adamant and accused CRC, and its executive director Dean Rizzo, of trying to compromise the integrity of the town. She added a lot of people in the town are scared and told the selectmen it was their duty to protect the average citizen.

"If you were an alien dropped into the town you would think Dean was the mayor," she said. "He gets whatever he wants, whenever he wants it."

At the meeting on Tuesday, accusations flew that CRC had an agenda. CRC is backed by Peter Roy, a Margin Street resident, and some felt the group was created to better serve him, and not the town.

Anne Giroux, a member on the board of trustees for the CRC, said the CRC has no agenda except to listen to the people. She added if residents wanted to become involved and have their voices heard, they should keep attending the public forums.

"We encourage people to keep coming to these workshops," she said. "Trust me, you can get rid of an idea if you want."

Murray Campbell, 75 Old Pasture Road, objected to the allegations made by some in attendance.

"Just about everything good in this town has been done by concerned citizens and some are backed by people who have money," he said. "A lot of good people with good intentions are having their reputations' maligned tonight."

Selectman Tom Callahan reminded those in attendance that CRC is a private company and is under no obligation to incorporate changes. He added ultimately, the decision to accept the improvements comes down to the selectmen, who could stop the designs if it wanted.

"We're the gatekeepers for the money appropriation towards these improvements," he said. "Obviously, we would only approve the plans if the citizens liked them."

Selectman Michael Sullivan didn't understand why residents were so upset.

"For anyone to complain about a company doing free planning doesn't make sense," he said. "I'd like to thank the CRC for all of its work."

Rizzo asked the selectmen to form a task force to work in conjunction with the CRC on the harbor improvements. The board said it would investigate the matter and get back to him in a few weeks.

Power cut to burying village utility wires

Although the Planning Board told Rizzo not to take it personally — the members said they would not support the Town Meeting article that would set the stage for utility bill surcharges to pay for the estimated $900,000 project.

The cost — as taxpayers are facing higher taxes and fiscal uncertainty over the 60 percent state reimbursement on the $40 million school projects — is the biggest obstacle, board members said.

"It's a money issue," said chairman Al Moore.

But Rizzo said this was the time to propose the project.

"Where we're going to be digging up the village anyway," he said about planned streetscape improvements. He explained, for example, installing new sidewalks would require digging a foot down and it would not be a lot more work to bury the conduit for the wires.

"It's time sensitive and if it's not done when the (sidewalks) are torn up, it's unlikely the town will tear them up again," Rizzo said.

To cover the cost of the project, residents would pay a 2 percent utility surcharge on their monthly telephone and electric bills and a fixed-rate 90-cent surcharge on their monthly cable bill for six years. Rizzo estimated the total annual cost would average about $50 per household.

He said doing the project in conjunction with the excavation and construction work for the village project would save about $500,000.

But Rizzo couldn't persuade the Planning Board to support the proposal before Town Meeting, whose authorization for the surcharges is required.

Planning Board member Bob Sturdy said the town didn't need any more taxes.

"We keep saying, 'only a nickel here' but it's all adding up and driving people out of town," he said.

Moore, the chairman, said while it was a viable project, as a local business owner with a lot of phone lines, he was nervous.

"By not supporting it, I don't mean it's not a nice idea," he said.

Board member Bill Good said taxpayers are nervous right now.

"This is a tough year for our board to suggest to townspeople that we are in support of a $1 million project to put the utilities underground," he said.

Board member Peter Pratt was concerned about safeguards for ratepayers if Town Meeting gave the utilities authorization to assess the surcharge. He wondered how the town would be protected from being assessed surcharges, if the village project didn't come to fruition. The lion's share of the village streetscape enhancements are coming through a state grant, which Pratt thought might not be a sure thing due to the state's fiscal crisis.

"It's a money issue."
— Al Moore, Planning Board

Rizzo said later, the surcharges can be stopped or started up again at anytime throughout the project per order of the selectmen or town manager.

Sturdy suggested CRC consider "putting the squeeze" on the utilities, for what would be in his view, mitigation for the town's electrical outages and poor cellular service.

"We are not being well served by the utilities in this town," he said.

There was also some discussion on why burying the utilities in area of the Town Common wasn't on the plans. Rizzo said enhancements to the Town Common were a separate project. He explained later the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission has selected a design firm to work on a landscape preservation plan for the common that is being paid for through a $30,000 grant from the state Department of Environmental Management. A plan to install underground utilities around the common could be added onto the village program later, Rizzo said.

As Rizzo packed up his design boards to leave last Wednesday's meeting, Good tried to put a positive spin on the night's discussion

"We've shot you dead," Good said. "But I also believe the village revitalization will go ahead successfully without the underground utilities and we will all enjoy an improved village."

Nevertheless, voters at the March 30 annual will have the final say on whether surcharges for burying the utilities should be assessed.. If Town Meeting gives the go ahead, the project would start in January, 2003. The CRC has spent about $33,000 through private donations from residents and businesses for engineering plans for the underground utilities.

Rizzo fared a little better before selectmen Tuesday. The board agreed to rescind their letter halting harbor workshops and did not rule out backing the plan to bury the village utility wires.

True love

Bryanton said she sees the couple as very loving and genteel, and admires how much they have participated in various activities even in their 90s.

"I would think when you're in your 90s, it would be easier just to stay at home," she said. "But they always came out to functions and looked like a handsome couple when they did."

The Somervilles say the secret to their lengthy marriage is they simply enjoy one another's company. Arthur says the couple always makes sure to never go to bed angry.

"We always talk before going to sleep, even now," Arthur said.

Jeanette, who is a descendant of Abraham Lincoln, was born and raised in Cohasset and lived in the same house she was born in. The couple recently moved to the New England Friends Home at Thayer House in Hingham.

Gretchen Condon, director of the Thayer House, said the pair has been a welcomed addition. While there are 19 people in the house, Arthur is one of only two men. Condon, who has been the director for more than six years, said this is the first time in her tenure that a couple has moved in to the house.

"They add a very pleasant atmosphere and are great company," she said. "It's beautiful to see."

There is a special tea scheduled for Valentine's Day at Thayer House and the following day, a van full of Cohasset seniors will be visiting.

"It should be a fun time for people to catch up with their friends," Condon said.

The couple has one son, Wesley, three grandchildren and four great grandchildren. The couple said the best Valentine's Day cards will surely come from their family.

"Family means the world to us," Arthur said. "It's part of what keeps us going."

Keeping World's End just the way it is to learn about its historic, scenic and ecological features," she said. "At the same time, we want to ensure our own management doesn't harm the property."

Copies of the plan are available at the World's End gatehouse and at Hingham Public Library. Community input is welcome, as are more volunteers. About 270 volunteer hours are needed to implement phase one of the management plan alone.

"The committee is made up of trustees, neighbors and other interested parties," said Thomas Foster of the Trustees of Reservations. "The backbone of the effort is volunteers. We want to get a sense of what the community wants and manage the land in ways that make sense."

That's why public input plays an important role.

Last June, an open forum was held to allow interested parties to share their visions and concerns for the property.

The rocky shore, drumlins, wide, tree-lined causeways, miles of footpaths, abundant wildlife, large meadows and panoramic views of the ocean and Boston skyline are key attractions, but all that doesn't just happen by itself.

Without proper stewardship, the land — which served as a private farm owned by the late John R. Brewer and his descendants for many years — would return to forest and become overgrown.

"The hallmark of the visitor experience is a sense of tranquility, but not solitude, within a suburban setting. It's a place individuals and families enjoy coming to," said Lisa Vernegaard, director of planning and ecology for the Trustees of Reservations. "We want to preserve the property as it is today for future generations."

The new management plan includes 55 specific recommendations, calling for a detailed grassland management program, preservation of the land and protecting it from potential threats, restoring Damde Meadows to a functioning salt marsh and maintaining the unique natural features that distinguish World's End, including a maritime juniper woodland and an oak hickory forest.

Work on the dam, at an estimated cost of between $150,000 to $200,000, will be funded by the Trustees and is slated to begin this summer.

Other priorities include improving the entrance to World's End, alleviating traffic congestion in the area and enhancing educational opportunities for visitors during off-peak hours.

The possibility of instituting a shuttle service from the Harbor Shuttle or future train station is under consideration to help limit the number of cars at the site.

"We also recognize World's End could be a friendlier place for people with disabilities to provide easier access, while continuing to preserve its character," Vernegaarde said.

Although the last management plan was shaped 30 years ago, she said it's in line with the new one.

Once the work recommended in the management plan — which will take place over a six-year period — begins, providing visitors with project updates is a key priority. A committee will also monitor implementation of the plan on an ongoing basis.

Other concerns include traffic on Martin's Lane leading to World's End and any loosening of the requirement that dogs remain leashed at all times. (See related story.)

Harry Wey of Boulder Glen Road called Martin's Lane a "treacherous speedway."

"I'd like to see signs posted indicating there are a lot of children in the area," he said. "It's a basic safety issue going in and out, involving both visitors and residents."

World's End has a long history.

For example, colonists established an agricultural use of the property in the 1600s. Native Americans camped there for a time as well.

The preservation of World's End over the years is especially meaningful since the property was eyed as a potential site for the United Nations in 1945, a nuclear power plant during the 1960s and for a 150-home subdivision. Landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted was hired by John R. Brewer, who owned the property, in the late 1800s to design the roads and landscaping for a residential development. The tree-lined roadways designed by Olmsted, who also designed New York's Central Park and the Boston park system, remain today, but the development never came to fruition.

When the Trustees of Reservations expressed an interest in buying the property, $450,000 was raised through public and private donations to subsidize the purchase in 1967 in order to maintain the area for public enjoyment.

The Trustees of Reservations, funded in 1891, is a member-supported non-profit conservation organization, which preserves exceptional properties such as World's End for public use and enjoyment. The Trustees is not an agency of the government and is supported through membership dues, contributions, grants, reservation receipts, special events and endowments. World's End is open to the public. An entrance fee is charged to those who are not members. For further information, call the Trustees' Southeast Regional Office at 781-821-2977.

Loose pooches can wreak havoc at park

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Some unleashed pets at World's End are disturbing wildlife and visitors.

"We plan to renew our enforcement efforts to ensure dogs are kept on leashes," said Lisa Vernegaard, director of planning and ecology for the Trustees of Reservations, which owns the property. "We will continue to monitor compliance with the regulation, but if that doesn't work, we'll go to the next step and try something else."

Vernegaard said there's a growing concern about dogs jumping on both adults and children and incidents of dogs — as well as cats — harming wildlife, including birds.

"It poses a significant ecological problem," she said.

Vernegaard recently presented an updated management plan for the park, at which time the issue of dogs was brought up (see main story).

The requirement to leash dogs is an issue at Trustees of Reservations properties in other communities as well.

In one of those parks, a moratorium on dogs has been instituted. In another, a system is being tried out that requires dog owners to purchase a permit. Before that can happen, though, the dog owner must undergo an overview of the rules and regulations in place regarding leashing pets. Permits would be available to members only.

Permit holders must keep their dogs on leashes and wear a badge indicating they've purchased a permit.

"The purpose is to educate users about how to control their dogs," Vernegaard said.

Some dog owners agree with the leashing policy at World's End, while others would like to see some changes made.

A suggestion was made that designated areas be set aside for dogs to run unleashed during specific, posted times. However, there was a concern about how to control dogs even under those circumstances.

While acknowledging the issue is a complicated one, Nick Noon of Cohasset, a member of the planning committee which recently unveiled a management plan for World's End, nevertheless said there's an "overwhelming sentiment" of more rather than less control of dogs.

"There are safety concerns involved with dogs and children and senior citizens," Noon said. "Dogs can still enjoy the property on a long leash."

According to committee member Henry Hidell, there has also been a "tremendous reaction" from dog owners against the leash regulation.

"Many people have stopped coming to World's End and gone elsewhere for that reason," he said.

Still, even as a dog owner, he supports the leash law.

"It's a fragile area," said Hidell.

Only one election race so far

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The last day to pick up nomination papers at Town Hall is today (Thursday) and if the past few weeks have been any indication, not many candidates are stampeding to the Town Clerk's office.

In what Town Clerk Marion Douglas described as a "slow year" for town elections, there is currently only one race – and that's a three-way contest for two seats on the Board of Selectmen..

Incumbents Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris will be running along with political newcomer, Roger Q. Hill of Highland Avenue.

Although this year hasn't provided a lot political excitement — some don't think that's a bad thing.

"I think people are satisfied with how things are run," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Selectman Tom Callahan, who ran last year unopposed and was re-elected, said there are a combination of factors that contribute to the lack of people on the ballot.

"I don't think people are disinterested," he said. "But generally, it's a thankless job that involves a huge time commitment."

Callahan added that if there was a contingent of people who were truly dissatisfied with the way town government was run, they'd become involved.

Selectman Merle Brown, who was also re-elected last year, agreed and said he feels people are happy with the way things are going right now.

"I think generally, people are pleased with the job of the town government," he said.

There is currently someone running for every position available this year except for the Recreation Commission. Only two sets of nomination papers have been pulled and there are three seats up for grabs on the commission. Recreation Commissioners Mary K. Muncey, 377 S. Main St., and Lillian Curley, 28 Margin St. are both looking to serve another term, but David Marks says he will not seek reelection.

Two residents are running unopposed so far for open seats. Jane Pescatore of Lantern Lane plans to run for the open seat on the School Committee being vacated by Stephanie Noble, who is not seeking reelection. Mary Granville, 100 Beach St., will seek a seat on the Board of Assessors left open by William B. Smith.

Cohasset hockey team eyes long tourney run

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The answer comes surprisingly fast.

"Yeah, this is probably the best team I've ever coached here," responds Cohasset hockey coach Dennis Walsh. "We've got depth, we have a lot of kids that skate really well, and we play good two-way hockey."

You'd think with 30 seasons behind him, it would take Walsh a little longer to ponder the question.

Then again, Walsh has never had an unbeaten team, and this current edition (15-0-1) stands four wins away from making that a reality.

Walsh still talks glowingly about his 1988 team, featuring current junior varsity coach Peter Sandblom in net, which lost only three games and advanced to the quarterfinals of the state tourney. However, you get the sense that the longtime coach would be bitterly disappointed if this team doesn't exceed that post-season accomplishment...and not just because this is his final season of walking behind the Cohasset bench.

"I picked the right group to go out with," noted a chuckling Walsh, who retired from teaching last year, "I've got that go for broke attitude anyway, but these kids are making that easy. There's always a little luck involved when you get into the tourney, but these kids really look like they could do something."

The skating Skippers needed nothing in the way of luck to finish off their South Shore League schedule last week, defeating Hull and Harwich by a combined score of 12-0 that didn't even begin to describe the disparity in talent between Cohasset and these two fledgling programs.

Walsh skated half of his junior varsity squad last Wednesday against Hull, a team the Skippers beat 10-0 last month (with the score reaching 9-0 before the midway point). Still, Pirates All-Star caliber keeper Mark Saville had to make 50 saves to keep it a

Sheerin, Bixby and Guiney lead way into Saturday's Sectionals

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The Kristin Sheerin Era of gymnastics at Cohasset High is in the homestretch. The best gymnast the school has ever produced will be competing with her Cohasset-Norwell teammates in Saturday's South Sectional championships at Foxboro High. Then, the talented senior, who'll continue her gymnastics career at the University of New York at Brockport next fall, will hopefully be competing in the All-State individual championships.

Sheerin just missed winning her third Pilgrim Conference 2 title last Saturday at Carver with a second-place finish in the all around at 34.6. Sheerin captured the championship as a seventh grader and again last winter.

Still feeling the effects of a bout with the flu, she was edged out by the Crusaders' Steve Cudworth's 34.85. Cudworth is able to compete on the girls' team because Carver doesn't offer a boys' program. The difference between first and second for Sheerin was her two falls on the balance beam.

Sheerin, though, wasn't overly disappointed with her runner-up showing.

"I did really well in my other events but I lost focus on the beam," said Sheerin. "My bars and floor scores were good. Overall, if I have a good meet, I can beat him."

Sheerin's fabulous season wasn't overlooked, though. She, along with teammates Meredith Bixby and Jen Guiney were elected con-

The game plan was there. The execution wasn't.

In both games the Cohasset basketball Skippers played last week, they attacked their opponents in the right way, and put themselves in position to contend for the win. But the shots did not fall for Cohasset, and their South Shore League record fell to 1-11.

"We ran our offense as well as we have all year," asserted 11th year coach Ron Ford. "The shots just weren't going down for us. We took good shots, but we just turned the ball over more than usual."

On Monday, Cohasset took on the high-flying Rough Riders, where the athletically superior Harwich squad got the better of their hosts, winning 63-48.

Cohasset opened up the game winning the battle in the paint, opening up an 8-4 lead. With his team down 11-6 six minutes in, veteran Harwich coach Glenn Rose called a time-out, and ordered on his amazingly physical full-court press.

The Rough Riders rattled off a 22-8 run, forcing more rushed shots than turnovers from the Skippers. Height also proved to be a major factor, as Harwich's big men Justin Turco and Scott Keeler (combining for 25 rebounds) consistently gave their team second and third chances.

Cohasset recovered though, on consecutive perimeter shots by

Wrestlers take fourth at sectionals, advance seven to states

by Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset wrestling team finished an improbable fourth at the South Sectional Wrestling championships this weekend, but lapped the entire field when it came to compelling stories.

Where to start…? Joey Kehoe? Dan Littauer? Jonathan Littauer? Mike Casey? Terry Baroudi?

How about the unexpected fourth-place finish in a field of 20 Div. 3 schools…a fitting capper to a weekend full of implausible subplots

It was a virtual foregone conclusion heading into the Friday-Saturday affair at Mansfield High that Foxboro, Duxbury and Canton were head and shoulders above the rest of the field. The only drama seemed to be if Duxbury could hold off Canton for third place. It did. Foxboro ran away with the team title, scoring 259 points, followed by Duxbury (200) and Canton (187).

The objective, essentially, for the other 17 teams in attendance was to compete for fourth place. Most close observers felt large, established programs like Holliston, Dedham or Rockland had the edge in this secondary tussle, but Cohasset shocked those schools' supporters and virtually everyone else by taking fourth place with a total of 142.5 points, finishing just ahead of Rockland (133).

"When I think of how far we've come as a team and a program this year in such as short time, I'm just amazed," gushed longtime Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "Halfway through the season, I would've never guessed we'd finish anywhere near the top four at sectionals. We had to plug so many holes along the way because of injuries and sickness and other things, but we had so many kids who just never gave up. They kept working hard, and when the time came, so many of them stepped up huge."

In pulling off this remarkable feat, seven Cohasset wrestlers finished in the top six to qualify for this weekend's state Div. 3 championships at

Cohasset-Scituate swimmers shine against monster programs at All-Conference meet

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The male and female Scituate-Cohasset swim team proved once and for all that it is not the size of the team that matters. Last week, both teams participated in the All-Conference meet—the girls finishing fourth on Thursday, and the boys taking seventh Friday.

"We are, by far, the smallest team in the Pilgrim Conference," noted second year coach Jamie Kearney. "But we knew we would surprise some people at how well our tiny team could match-up with the swimming superpowers."

For the girls, nearly every member of the 13 member team took a top 12 finish in at least one event to score points for the team.

"It is what I have been saying all year: we make everyone on our team count," said a smiling Kearney. "There is no other team in the State that had as high a percentage of their kids place as we did."

Freshman Becky Keyes highlighted the day for the Sci-Cohs, taking first place in the diving competition. Scoring a 145 combined from her five dives, she completed an outstanding day when she took sixth in the 500 freestyle.

With 25 points scored for her team, Keyes was named the only league All-Star from the Sci-Coh squad.

Scituate junior Kathryn Noonan had the highest finish of the individual swimmers, taking third in the 100 backstroke, an event that she will be competing in at Sectionals later this week. Noonan also turned in an eighth place in the 200 yard Individual Medley to round out her 17 point day.

Scituate freshman Danielle Swain, who will also be competing this week at Sectionals, took fourth in the 200 Individual Medley, swimming a season best.

She also placed sixth in the 100 backstroke, and event in which she does not primarily compete.

Cohasset sophomore Delia Regan swam personal bests in the 50 freestyle and 100 freestyle en route to top five finishes. Regan will be swimming the freestyle in two different relays for the Sci-Cohs at Sectionals.

Scituate senior captain Jen Kreutzberg, one of four Sci-Cohs whose swimming careers ended last week, placed 5th in her top event, the 100 breastroke, and took 10th in the 50 freestyle.

Junior Amanda Turner turned in her top time in the 100 butterfly, finishing sixth, and also took tenth in the 200 IM. Right behind her in the IM was freshman Liz Tierney, who finished 11th. Tierney's top event of the day was the 100 freestyle, where she placed sixth.

Cohasset sophomore Elise Jerome took seventh in the fly and tenth in the backstroke, while senior captain Kelly Stone took home a pair of eighth places in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle events.

Scituate juniors Shevawn Mayo and Erin Feeney, both much improved distance swimmers, placed eighth and ninth, respectively, in the 200 freestyle.

Feeney took ninth later in the day in the 500 freestyle as well.

Senior swimmer/assistant coach Cara Foley placed in both of her events, taking 12th in both the 100 breastroke and the 50 free.

At the boys championships the next day, the three eligible competitors put in an impressive showing against teams, some that were 60 strong, taking seventh in the Conference.

Both Cohasset juniors, Bryan Bilton and David Ingber, placed in both of their individual events. Their combined score gave Cohasset 20 points for the day, enough to keep Cohasset well within the top 10.

"It seems like nothing can intimidate our guys," noted Kearney. "Some of the best swimming programs in all of Eastern Mass are in our conference, but our boys don't back down."

Bilton, a junior captain for the Sci-Cohs, took eighth in the 50 freestyle, the event that was by far the most popular of the day. Bilton narrowly missed Sectionals again in the 100 freestyle, swimming a 58.62, coming in seventh.

Ingber finished one back of Bilton (ninth) in the 50 free, the two being separated by under two-tenths of a second. His top event of the day was the100 breastroke, where he swam a personal best time, finishing eighth in the conference.

The two-day marathon swim meets marked the end of the regular season for the Sci-Cohs. And they have plenty to look forward to for next year.

"We are losing our four seniors," started the coach, "but the 2002-2003 season could result in a huge step forward for our team. We are switching leagues, so we can start going against schools that are the same size as us.

"There is no telling what these kids will be able to accomplish then."

Taconic High School in Pittsfield. Joe Kehoe (112 pounds) and Dan Littuaer (152) earned the most points, taking second places in their respective divisions. Terry Baroudi (135 pounds), Chris McKenna (145) and Matt Casey (171) brought home fourth-place trophies for the Skippers, while Jonathan Littauer (103) and Phil Strazzulla (125) took solid fifths.

No one stepped up bigger than captain Dan Littauer, who, according to medical opinion, shouldn't have even been here. When the senior suffered a badly dislocated elbow on Dec. 5, the prognosis was a four-month healing period and the end of his high school wrestling career. He made it back to the mats in less than half that proscribed time — Feb. 5, to be exact. He earned a 14-2 victory in his season debut to help push the Skippers past Rockland, 39-32, to take the league championship.

So, with a 1-0 record, Littauer — who finished second at Sectionals and fifth at States last year — headed into the sectionals. His reputation bought him a number two seed, but he proved worthy for this respect by dominating all comers, including Duxbury's high seeded Steve Celino in the quarterfinals with a pin and Carver three seed Matt Smith in the semis with a 17-2 Tech win. He moved into the finals against number one seed Mike Ragusa, of Foxboro — the defending Sectional champ and fifth place finisher in New England last year.

With his elbow quite sore and swelling noticeably, Littauer recorded the match's first takedown, but Ragusa quickly turned the tables with a reversal and take down to make it 3-2 after one period. Things remained tight in the second, the buzzer going off with Ragusa holding a 7-4 lead. Littauer went for a few gambles in the final period, but Ragusa turned them all against him to win going away, 11-4.

"I guess you could call Dan's story pretty amazing," said Sweeney. "That he could work his way back at all is pretty incredible, but then to dominate the field to get the finals and then give a wrestler like Ragusa all he could handle...like I said, amazing is the only way to describe it."

Dan's kid brother Jonathan opened a few eyes of his own in the smallest weight division, 103 pounds. He won four matches in all before losing to higher seeds and more seasoned wrestlers like Brian Smolinski (Hull) in the quarterfinals and Bill Drake (Holliston) in the consolation round. He was awarded fifth place when Smolinski was unable to go in the fifth-sixth place wrestle-off because of a hand injury.

But he wasn't even the biggest freshman surprise for the Skippers. Kehoe progressed steadily this season at 112 pounds while other teammates grabbed the lion's share of the limelight. He was awarded the fourth seed at 112 pounds, and recorded a few quality wins on Friday, but still wasn't one of the grapplers folks seemed to be talking about heading into Saturday's proceedings. That began to change after Kehoe pinned number five seed Mark DeSisto (Mansfield) in the quarterfinals and Waltham's Mike Rando in the semis to pit himself against Foxboro star Tyler Laracy in the finals. He lost there on points, 19-4, but clearly earned more respect by fending off the pin.

Terry Baroudi was looking to get back to States after he was forced to withdraw there last winter due to a shoulder injury (after a fourth place finish at Sectionals). The junior was seeded fifth in the 135-pound division, which Sweeney called "by far the strongest top to bottom" at the tourney. Baroudi won four matches, but both of his losses came in heartbreaking fashion to his old nemesis, Duxbury's Scott Klebanoff — who he also lost to twice during the regular season. Baroudi fell in the quarters to his Duxbury rival, 6-5, and then in the wrestle-off for third place, 7-6.

"I hope Terry sees Klebanoff again at States," declared Sweeney. "I think we might have a pretty good plan of attack for him next time around."

EVERY LITTLE BIT HELPED

Ian Hickey (bottom) did not advance to the second day of this weekend's Sectionals, but he did come up with a big pin to contribute to Cohasset's fourth place finish.

Right up there on a scale with Dan Littauer's inspirational efforts were the labors of junior Mike Casey. In the throws of a nasty flu bug, coach Sweeney wasn't even sure if the 171-pound Casey should have competed on Friday, but he somehow won three matches to advance to Day 2. Sweeney wavered on whether or not he should even let Casey go after seeing him the next morning, but the grappler's pleas won him over.

Not surprisingly, Casey was pinned in his opening match by number one seed and eventual champ Matt Lanuto (Duxbury), but he fought his way back in the consolation bracket. He pinned Carver's Ryan Cook to advance to the quarterfinals against Foxboro's Matt Morsehead in the quarterfinals.

With the score tied here early in the third period, a scoring discrepancy resulted in a stoppage of action. During the break, Casey vomited into a bucket. Sweeney urged him to take the disqualification and settle for sixth place. Casey again said no, and he went on to get a two-point takedown of Morsehead in the waning seconds to pull off the dramatic win.

"That was as courageous an effort as I've ever seen from a wrestler," said Cohasset's 19th-year coach. "Believe me, Mike was as sick as sick can be. I honestly thought he had nothing left. Where he found the strength to get Morsehead down for those final two points is something I'll never figure out. He had to be riding on pure adrenaline."

And the beat went on for the Skippers:

Sophomore Phil Strazzulla made good on his fifth seed, winning three matches to maintain that polling. He lost to Scituate's Stephen Barry on day two, and then fell in a consolation round heartbreaker to Canton's Khanh Pham, 9-8, falling just short in a furious third period comeback rally.

Junior Chris McKenna finished two spots higher than his sixth seed, but came extremely close to going higher. He lost twice to third place finisher Ryan Luttrell, of Keefe Tech, by the score of 4-2. His highlight of the day, though, was dominating Duxbury's higher seeded Doug Imbrogana, 14-2, in the quarterfinals.

Vital points towards the fourth place team finish were also contributed by Matt Baroudi (Terry's freshman brother), who finished seventh overall in the 189-pound division, as well as by seniors Vinnie Gratta (119 pounds) and John Hussey (215), sophomore Ian Hickey (140) and freshman Bill Carbone (130)—all of whom earned two points with first day pins.

The top four finishers from this weekend's Div. 3 state championships will qualify to move on to meet the top wrestlers in Div. 1 and 2 at next Saturday's All-State championships at Salem High School. Top two finishers here will advance to the New England championships the following Saturday.

"I honestly think all seven guys we're sending to states has a shot at finishing top four," appraised Sweeney, who will be renting a van and booking a few hotel rooms in Pittsfield this weekend. "All of them have the potential to wrestle even better than they did at Sectionals."

Chris Bilodeau and Liam Martin, who led Cohasset with 16 points, to make the score 28-27, Harwich.

In the second half, Harwich worked its way up to a 12 point lead, with Turco and Keeler seemingly unstoppable on the offensive glass. South Shore League All-star Adam Rose (17 points) also kept Cohasset's zone defense honest, hitting four 3-point shots.

Cohasset pulled to within eight when Ben Lynner (nine points) and Liam Martin combined for a 6-0 run. However, a few Keeler putbacks and a bizarre technical foul call sealed the game.

Harwich now stands at 9-8, and while their record may not show it, they are one of the leading contenders for the Division 4 State Crown. The mediocre record is merely a result of the extremely difficult South Shore League schedule they had (just as the Skippers have), facing a few of the top Div. 3 teams like Abington, Carver and Norwell.

"We have got a real chance," noted a smiling coach Rose, who needs to win one of his final three games to clinch a spot in the tourney. "It has been a lot of fun."

Cohasset had another tough loss last Friday, with the outstanding Carver squad getting the better of the Skippers 55-49.

Carver showed early on why they are one of the favorites to defend their Sectional title from a year ago, dominating the opening half, 38-11. Just as it was against Harwich, Ford was pleased with the running of the offense, but the shots just did not go down.

"There was a lid on the basket," he appraised.

Led by senior captain Pete Maitland, the Skippers surged back against the Crusader bench, getting so close that Carver was forced to put their starters back in.

Maitland, who was named to the All-Star team last weekend, scored 17 points during the comeback, a game-high.

"Pete has probably improved more from his junior year to his senior year than anyone I have ever coach," lauded Ford.

Maitland' co-captain, Matt Bilodeau was also named an All_Star, but will be unable to play due to a broken ankle. Apparently, Bilodeau suffered the fracture way back in December playing Scituate, but just played through the pain.

"He is one of the toughest captains I think I have ever had," said Ford. "I was ecstatic we got both of them onto the All-Star team, though."

Carver's All-Star center, Ralph Frazier, led the Crusaders with 16 points.

Cohasset-Harwich Game Notes

-Harwich outscored Cohasset on fast break points, 20-4.

-Maitland and Martin hit the first two treys Cohasset attempted in the game, then the team finished 1-for-11 from behind the arc.

-Sophomore 5-foot-7 point guard Chris Bilodeau led the Skippers in rebounding for the first time this year with seven.

-From the end of the first half to the beginning of the second, the teams combined to miss seven consecutive free throws.

ference All-Stars prior to the meet. Guiney, the freshman from Norwell, finished second on the floor (8.3) ahead of Bixby and Nancy Durkin. Samantha Keough of Norwell was a solid sixth.

Bixby's score of 8.05 was good enough for first place on bars, ahead of third-place Guiney and Durkin, who took fifth. Bixby's top score came on the vault where she registered an 8.6 for first. Samantha Rosen was fourth overall with Durkin pulling up sixth place.

Cohasset-Norwell heads to Saturday's South Sectional meet at Foxboro with a season-average score of 130.55. C-N will be up against the South's iron in both Barnstable and Attleboro. Both teams have averaged better than 135 this season.

"We have a pretty young team," said Sheerin. "They'll be a little intimidated at first, but once we get into it and get going, we'll be fine. We're aiming for 130 or above."

C-N head coach Kara Connerty believes the score is well within the team's reach. The key, as has been the case through C-N's 10-1 season, will be whether or not the squad can avoid falls on the beam event.

"We have to stick the beam," said Connerty. "That hasn't changed."

Sheerin is hoping to compete in the All-State individuals as well. Last year a tough showing on the bars landed her 12th-place overall in the all around, which she is looking forward to vastly improving on this go around.

Cohasset defenseman Eric Libby looks like a no-brainer selection for the South Shore League All-Star team.

Going for broke

3-0 game. Cohasset netminder Dan Kinchla, conversely, had to turn away just three shots on goal to record his league best sixth shutout of the season. Solo tallies were provided by John Durkin, Tom Anderson and captain Chris Caron.

Shutout number seven for the Skippers senior goalie came 24 hours later on the same Pilgrim Arena ice in a 9-0 win over visiting Harwich.

The top lines again spent most of the night glued to the pine, but Greg O'Connell managed to add two goals and an assist to his SSL best scoring stats (22 goals-25 assists—47 points) before getting the quick hook. His right winger, Durkin, also managed to pot a pair in the early going, as did Anderson. These two players are currently second and fourth in the league scoring race with 32 and 31 points, respectively. Matt Davis (24 points) moved into a tie for fifth in this race with a goal and an assist.

For those of you keeping track, this brought the Skippers goals for-goals against differential on the season to a +108 (127-19).

Clearly, the depth up front—three regular forward lines plus two wingers who Walsh rotates in regularly—is what sets the Skippers apart, but this is far from a one-dimensional team. As the low goal yield reflects, Kinchla has done the job in net, and the Skippers have five defensemen—led by seeming no-brainer All-Star selections Eric Libby and Tim Straughn— who do as good a job as any other collective backline in these parts of getting the puck out of their zone.

"We're a well balanced team," asserts Walsh. "No doubt about that. Our work at the defensive end seems to get overshadowed by all of the scoring, but that's been real impressive too. The defensemen do the job, and our forwards are good two-way players."

Something else the lopsided tally reflects, however, is the fact that the Cohasset skaters have not felt a whole lot of pressure this season. This is a legitimate concern to Walsh, who knows the caliber of competition will improve dramatically when the state tourney gets underway two weeks from now.

"I wish now we'd had a little bit tougher schedule, but this is what we were given," said Walsh. "Most of the games were in league, and we can't do anything about that. To the kids credit, they've continued to skate hard, and move the puck well no matter who've they've played against, but you would like to see them tested a little bit more than they have been."

The longtime coach anticipates an all too familiar script in meetings this week with Trinity Catholic (Wednesday) and Randolph (Saturday), teams the Skippers dissected by a combined 23-0 earlier this season, but hopes for sterner challenges in the final two regular season games against Div. 3 tourney bound teams Scituate (Feb. 18) and Avon-Holbrook (Feb.20).

Scituate (7-8-1) has arguably played one of the toughest schedules of any Div. 3 team in the state, competing in league play against higher division powerhouses Duxbury, Hanover and Hingham, and twice each in non-league play against Div. 2 tourney bound teams Quincy and Marshfield. Scituate, like the Skippers, has already qualified for the tournament by virtue of its unbeaten record in Div. 3 play (4-0).

Avon-Holbrook (8-6-2) competes in the same league as Blue Hills (15-2-1), the number one ranked Div. 3 team in Eastern Mass, so this one might also provide a decent test.

Looking to challenge his charges further, Walsh has scheduled a scrimmage the day following this season finale with Div. 2 tourney bound Marshfield (13-4-2).

"We should see some good competition in the last week," said Walsh. "The kids could use some good battle testing right now. We don't want to be shocked once the tourney starts."

And, clearly, the coach wants this ride to last as long as possible.

IT'S HAPPENING

Appalachian Festival

On Saturday, March 9 the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project is hosting its second annual "Appalachia Festival" at St. Anthony's parish center. This fun, family oriented evening includes a delicious Appalachian style dinner followed by live Blue Grass entertainment.

The evening commences at 5:30 p.m. with an Open Market Place (free admission) featuring Appalachian crafts and snack foods. A family-style dinner is served at 6:30 p.m., followed by live Blue Grass entertainment at 7:30 p.m.. A beautiful, homemade Appalachian quilt will be on display during the evening and raffle tickets for the quilt will be sold.

Tickets are available at local churches. Ticket prices are $5 (8-and-under), $10 (10-18 years), $20 (adults), $50 (family admission). Proceeds from the event help support the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project.

Diabetes workshop

Cohasset Elder Affairs will hold a workshop on Living the Good Life With Diabetes on Feb. 22, from noon to 1:30 p.m. Millie Hawke RNC, Diabetes Educator, and Lynn White, Nurse Practitioner, will discuss risk factors and signs and symptoms of diabetes along with staying healthy with nutrition and exercise. Bring a bag lunch. Dessert and beverages will be served. Call 781-383-9112 for information.

Vacation camp

South Shore Community Center is offering a February Gymnastics/Sports Camp for boys and girls during February school vacation week. The camp will run on Feb. 20, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. The cost is $32. All boys and girls ages 5 to 11 are welcome.

Children should bring a lunch and snack. Call the center at 781-383-0088 to register, or stop by the office at 3 North Main Street in Cohasset Monday through Friday. Limited enrollment.

The Garage Valentine's dance

Love is in the air! There will be a Valentines Day Dance at the Garage on Friday, Feb. 15 from 7-10 p.m. There will be a door charge of $5 per person. Snacks and refreshments will also be sold.

The Garage is open to all young people, grade-6-and-up.

OBITUARIES

Mary M. Daley

Mary M. Daley, 98, lifelong resident of Cohasset, died Feb. 7, 2002, at the Serenity Hill Nursing Home & Rehabilitation Center in Wrentham following an illness.

Miss Daley was born and raised in Cohasset, attending area schools. A Boston area secretary for many years, she was an active communicant of St. Anthony Parish.

Daughter of the late Dennis and Catherine (Donovan) Daley, she was predeceased by her brother, Carroll D. Daley Sr., and sister, Catherine E. Daley.

She leaves two nieces, Virginia D. Willis and Patricia C. Howes, both of Walpole; a nephew, Carroll D. Daley Jr. of Georgia; grandnieces and grandnephews.

A Mass of Christian Burial was celebrated at St. Anthony Church. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to the American Cancer Society, 115 West Chestnut St., Brockton, 02401.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset.

Rita A. Lennon

Rita A. (Wallace) Lennon, of Cohasset died Feb. 10, 2002, at her daughter, Joyce McFadden's home in Hull following a brief illness. She was 87.

Born in Boston and raised in Roslindale, Mrs. Lennon attended area schools. She lived in Milton for 20 years and Cohasset for 25 years.

Wife of the late Edward B. Lennon, she leaves her children, Kevin T. Lennon of Canton, John S. Lennon of Cohasset, Joyce L. McFadden of Hull and Paula M. Sullivan of Centerville; two sisters, Ethel L. Tonra O'Neil of Tequesta, Fla. and Eleanor Rush Bishop of Boca Raton, Fla.; a sister-in-law, Anne Murray of Weymouth; 12 grandchildren; and eight great-grandchildren. She was also mother of the late Edward W. Lennon; sister of the late Norman and Joseph Wallace; and dear friend of the late John E. Sexton.

A funeral will be held at 9 a.m. Thursday from the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset (across from St. Anthony Church), followed by a Mass of Christian Burial at 10 a.m. at St. Anthony Church. Interment will be private.

In lieu of flowers, memorial gifts may be made to the Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Bay State Drive, Braintree, 02184 or St. Francis House, 37 Boylston St., Boston, 02116.

Two new faces to take to the bank

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Construction of the new branch of the Pilgrim Co-operative Bank on Route 3A is right on schedule.

According to bank president Frank Campbell, the completion date is still slated for mid-March and the construction company plans to install sheet rock next week.

Pilgrim's main branch remains at 48 S. Main St. in the village where it has been a landmark since 1916. However, the site on 3A will have some added features that the village office doesn't provide.

Besides drive-up ATMs and teller service, customers can look forward to meeting the newest additions to the bank in assistant vice-president and branch manager Paul Cosgrove, and vice-president and lending manager Kevin Burns.

Cosgrove has worked for about three weeks at Pilgrim Co-operative and is looking forward to opening the new branch. He brings more than 12 years of experience in the retail banking business and said he is accustomed to providing customers with quality service.

"I most enjoy sitting down with customers and helping them fix a problem," Cosgrove said. "I like to form a one-on-one relationship with them and this bank encourages that."

Cosgrove, who lives in Quincy but is from Hingham, said servicing customers is his number one priority. He will also oversee the day-to-day operations, manage personnel, and try to cross-sell the bank's services.

Currently, Cosgrove is meeting and greeting the bank's customers and is learning the bank's system. He said a new branch was necessary because the bank has experienced decent growth and there was a need to better serve the customers with a more accessible site. However, not everything will be different at the new bank on 3A.

"We have absolutely no intention of changing the level of service and the commitment to the customers at the new branch," he said.

Cosgrove said while other banks may claim they're involved with the community — it's true with Pilgrim Co-operative Bank.

> "We know your name and we want to help you."
> — Paul Cosgrove, branch manager

"We know your name and we want to help you," he said.

Along with Cosgrove, Burns will be opening the new branch office and is anxious to get the process underway.

Burns, who has lived in Braintree for more than 20 years, said he has the experience to help the bank develop additional business. He plans to become active in the community by meeting with brokers, insurance agents and lawyers in an attempt to drum up business. He said the entire mortgage department, which comprises nearly 80 percent of the institution's assets, will move over to the new branch office.

Burns has been with Pilgrim Co-operative for about a month, but has been in the banking business for 30 years. While working for New World Bank, Burns was involved with opening three branch offices and he said it is one of the most rewarding experiences of banking.

"It's always a thrill to open a new branch," he said. "It's the opportunity to start from the ground and build up."

Burns is confident the bank will be able to provide the same comfort level that residents are accustomed to.

"We will give the same type of service because it's not so much the location of the branch but rather the people who work here," he said. "It's still going to be Cohasset's bank and customers should be excited about it."

The new building, designed by Financial Concepts of Natick, a firm specializing in bank design, won approval from the town Planning Board last spring. It replaces the boarded-up building, now razed, which was at one time a liquor store and then an art studio.

The building will have a main entrance off Brewster Road, as well as another access through the adjacent Tedeschi Plaza. There will be no direct access off 3A.

Campbell said the new building will not have a negative impact on the bank's main branch.

"We will always remain true to our roots in the village," he said. "This is like an extension of the family."

Bond rating hike will save money

However, in financial circles the town looks as good as those Atlantic vistas from the Gold Coast along Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue. Both Moody's and Standard & Poor's, which are rating agencies, have upgraded the town's bond rating, saving Cohasset hundreds of thousands of dollars, officials say.

The news comes at a good time as the town is poised to borrow about $40 million in a few years to pay for the middle-high and Deer Hill school building projects.

"It's absolutely significant," says treasurer Joseph DiVito Jr. "It will save the state money too because the borrowing costs will be lower." (The state will reimburse the town for 60 percent of the cost of the school projects. But reimbursement could be delayed for up to five years because of the state's budget crisis, making the bond upgrade even more important.)

Town Manager Mark Haddad estimates the upgrade will save taxpayers over the next 20 years a total of about $758,000.

"The community has made very significant capital investments," Haddad said. "And it's our job to deliver them as inexpensively as we can."

This is the third time in six years the agencies have upgraded Cohasset's bond rating, town Finance Director Michael Buckley said. Moody's and Standard & Poor's recently upgraded the town from Aa3 to Aa2 and from AA to AA+, respectively.

To put the ratings in perspective, out of about 365 towns in the state — Cohasset joins an elite group of 18 towns rated at Aa2 (the third highest), including Duxbury and Canton. There are six towns rated at the next step, Aa1, including Hingham, Lincoln and Westwood, and 11 with the highest rating of Aaa, including Wellesley, Weston and Lexington. There are 20 possible ratings.

So what do the agencies like about Cohasset? According to Standard & Poor's, the town has extremely high wealth levels and increasing assessed valuations; well-maintained financial operations and a manageable debt position.

When it comes to assessed valuations the town has the highest home values in the region, the reports state.

"Cohasset's median home value jumped to $630,000 in fiscal year 2002," Moody's stated. "Of the town's 2,577 homes, 238 have been assessed in excess of $1 million." The town's assessed valuation of $1.6 billion has increased by more than 50 percent in the past two years.

Both agencies described the town's financial position as "well maintained" with tax collections historically strong at 99 percent.

"Although the town is taxing under its prescribed Proposition 2-1/2 limit, frequent debt exclusions, operating overrides and tax-base growth have provided the flexibility to manage within the limits," Standard & Poor's stated. "The willingness-to-pay was exhibited in the last recession as seven Prop. 2-1/2 overrides were passed from 1990-1993."

The agencies said the town's overall debt burden is manageable and expects the town's financial picture to remain stable in light of expected continued growth in its reserve accounts.

Buckley, the finance director, said as a result of upgrades from the rating agencies, Cohasset sold its recent bonds and notes at "extremely favorable rates" saving residents thousands of dollars.

He said the town sold $2.1 million in bonds in January at a rate of 3.59 percent, funds that will be used for sewers, Hagerty property improvements, equipment, land acquisition, cemetery improvements and sidewalks.

This month the town sold $6.3 million of notes at a net interest cost of 1.64 percent, money that will be used for ongoing school construction and renovation and construction of the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Haddad praised his financial team consisting of DiVito, Buckley and assessor/appraiser Cheryl Pooler.

"The budget decisions the team has made have been in the best interest of the taxpayers," he said.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Summer Institute courses offered

Course: Harbor Research Projects
Grades 7 - 12 (1.25 credits)
On-going throughout the summer
Cost: $75 materials / lab fee* (tuition fee may be waived if pending grant applications are funded.)
Description:
In the summer of 2001, MIT's Sea Grant College Program awarded Cohasset High School Summer Institute teachers with a $10,000 grant to assist the Cohasset Board of Health in addressing the town's concerns about water quality in Little Harbor and Cohasset Harbor. Research conducted over the last year will be continued this summer. In addition, a new project in the Gulf River will be initiated.

Students electing to join any one of these research projects will conduct and analyze chemical, physical, and biological assessments of these water bodies. Student teams will be headed by paid senior interns and led by Miss McGrail, Dr. Thomae, or Mr. Buckley. (This project runs throughout the summer; specific meeting days and times are decided upon by the teacher and participants. 54 hours class and field work is necessary to be eligible for course credit.)

Course: Maritime Studies and the Schooner Ernestina
Grades 7 - 12 (1.25 credits)
Aug 12- Aug 16
Cost: $575 per person
Description:
The class immerses students into life at sea as marine researchers, oceanographers, navigators, historians, deck hands, and galley stewards. The four day, three night sail aboard the historic Schooner Ernestina is an experience that students remember for the rest of their lives. This year's voyage departs from and returns to the port of Boston, allowing students to imagine themselves in the roles of mariners from centuries past, moving in and out of historic Boston. Students are required to participate in five pre-voyage meetings. These meetings prepare students to meet the academic requirements of the course. They also provide an opportunity for students to learn to work together on the water, the most crucial challenge that students must meet in order to make the voyage a rewarding experience for all. (Mr. Buckley)
Visit the Ernestina's website at http://www.ernestina.org

Course: National Park Field Study
Grades 9 - 12 (1.25 credits)
Mid July (specific dates, TBA)
Course fee: approx. $1200 per person
Class size limited to 12 students
Description:
National Park Field Study is a 10-day, intensive, on-site study and exploration of a national park. This year's field study class will travel to Canada to explore Nova Scotia and New Brunswick National Parks. Through the experiences of low impact camping and recreation (hiking, kayaking, climbing, and horseback riding are some examples) students will study park ecology, natural history, and human impact on the environment. In addition to the on-site days, students are required to prepare for and attend at least three evening classes (2 pre and 1 post). Students participating in this class must be accustomed to moderately strenuous physical activity. (Ms. McGrail)
Visit http://parkscanada.pch.gc.ca/parks/main_e.htm

Course: Messing about the North River
Grades: 7-8 (1.25 credits
Dates: June 24-28 (Tentative)
Cost: $250; enrollment limited to 11 students
Description:
Did you know that the North River is the only scenic protected river in the state of Massachusetts? Or, that the upper sections of the river include one of the largest tidal freshwater marshes in the state? The North River is an incredible natural resource with a wealth of ecosystems and history to explore. Come along and we'll investigate and explore the North River watershed through a week of hands-on field trips. The class will culminate in an overnight trip! (Mr. Jones / Mr. Erlandsen)

Course: Internships
Grades 11 or 12 (1.25 credits)
All Summer
Stipend: estimated hourly wage of $8
Description:
Paid internship opportunities are open to students who have demonstrated an interest in the environment and have proven themselves to be highly responsible students capable of conducting independent work and independent research. Internships currently exist with the Board of Health and with the Cohasset Maritime Institute. Board of Health interns will assist with various water quality assessments outlined in the town's Volunteer Monitoring Plan. CMI interns will assist professional boat builders in the restoration of historic craft. Interns are expected, among other academic requirements, to write a technical report documenting their accomplishments. (Dr. Thomae, Ms. McGrail, Mr. Buckley)

Cohasset students John McCarthy and Robin Earle learn the ropes as they tend one of Ernestina's down hauls under the watchful eye of the first mate as the Ernestina plunges into gentle swells rolling through Rhode Island Sound.

Pilgrim Arena offers scholarships

Applications for ten $2,000 scholarships are available (starting Thursday, Feb. 14) at the Pilgrim Skating Arena, 75 Recreation Park Drive in Hingham.

It is the 29th consecutive year that the Pilgrim Skating Arena is awarding scholarships to area high school seniors planning to further their education.

Interested seniors must pick up and sign for the application in person at the arena pro shop. Completed applications must be returned by Saturday, March 30.

Applicants will be judged by members of the Scholarship Committee of the Board of Directors at Pilgrim Arena.

For more information, call Hoby Taylor, 781-749-6660.

Kindergarten registration

Kindergarten registration for 2002/2003 is underway. Kindergartners must be 5-years-old on or before Sept. 1, 2002 in order to enroll. A copy of the child's birth certificate is required for registration.

Eleven arrested in January

January was a relatively quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 11 arrests, four for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, two for Motor Vehicle Violations, one for an Outstanding Warrant, two for Protective Custody, one for Assault and Battery, and finally one for Illegal Possession of a Class "D" Substance, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

During the month of January, the police department investigated 16 motor vehicle accidents, four of which resulted in personal injury. There were 149 Motor Vehicle Citations issued totaling $3,755 in fines. Additionally, there were 48 Parking Tickets issued for $1,225 in fines. There were 8 Criminal Complaints issued.

Also in December, the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 691 calls for police services, of those 106 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls, Noonan said.

In the month of January, there was one Breaking and Entering in a business, he said.

For their father

Nelson brothers pay tribute to 60s pop legend

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Call them Nelson or the Nelsons, but since the late 1980s, the brothers Matthew and Gunnar Nelson have seen their share of the pop music limelight. You can certainly call it the carrying on of a proud family tradition, which includes, among other things, a spot in the Guinness Book of World Records for no less than three generations of #1 pop hits — starting in 1934 with big-band crooner and later TV legend Ozzie's "And Then Some," followed twice in 1960 and '62 by the late rock 'n' roll hall of famer Rick's "Poor Little Fool" and "Travelin' Man, finally in 1990 by the Nelsons' MTV-age pop-rocker "(I Can't Live Without Your) Love and Affection."

Matthew and Gunnar Nelson, twin sons of Ricky Nelson will perform their father's music in two concerts Sunday, Feb. 17 at Norwell's Company Theatre.

Matthew and Gunnar Nelson list some more noteworthy pop-music accomplishments in their own right. The sibling duo's debut album, 1991's After the Rain, went double-platinum, five more strong-selling albums of original material have followed, as have two more Top Ten singles, four #1 MTV videos and five #1 singles overseas in Japan, Singapore, Thailand and elsewhere in the Southeast Asian markets.

But for the Nelson brothers, the now 34-year-old twin sons of Rick Nelson, the idea of playing their father's music publicly was for many years another matter altogether. Not the least of the reasons was that even as their own star arose, the brothers had to slowly come to grips with the lingering shock following Rick's untimely death as his private plane crashed en route to a Dallas show on New Year's Eve, 1985.

Part of this process was the brothers' commitment to not perform Rick's music live, mainly out of respect for his memory. But finally in 1999, Matthew and Gunnar broke the silence and accepted an offer from a promoter to work out a concert set of Rick Nelson music and take it on tour worldwide. The result was so successful, with shows drawing wildly enthusiastic sell-out crowds both in the U.S. and abroad, that over two years later, the event has now grown into a regular touring attraction, featuring both the tribute recreation of Rick's pioneering rock 'n' roll hits as well as the brothers' own top-selling music. It has even delivered a concert disc, 2000's Like Father, Like Sons, the Nelsons' seventh album overall, featuring their live renderings of "Stood Up," "Waitin' in School," "Hello Mary Lou" and other classic Rick hits.

The current show, called Matthew & Gunnar Nelson's Garden Party, makes one of its first-ever New England stops at Norwell's Company Theatre for two concerts Sunday, Feb. 17 at 3 and 7 p.m.

"Even now when we've been doing this for a couple of years, we still feel at some shows like it's the first time we're playing Rick's music," said Matthew Nelson. "We're playing to new audiences all the time, and for them I'm sure it feels like they're getting back something that's been gone for a long time. But the truth is Gunnar and I were best friends with Rick when he was alive, and what these shows are about is doing him and his music justice and waving his flag."

Currently, the Nelsons are also keeping their father's music alive with the benefit of information revealed on VH-1's Behind the Music spot on Rick Nelson, which has begun airing within the last year. Among other things, the program stated hopefully once and for all that the cause of Nelson's fatal plane crash was a fire from a faulty heating system, not, as widely reported and speculated, from the singer and his entourage free-basing cocaine on board.

"I found out about Rick's death on the TV news, and Gunnar found out on the radio," said Matthew Nelson, recalling the day of the tragedy. "I think the toughest thing for me was staying home in the days following the news, with the family and friends trying to comfort each other, and listening to the crap on the radio. We all knew that Rick did not free-base cocaine, and there was no way that was involved with the cause of the crash. So having to go through listening to these sensationalistic stories through the media, we just felt they were pathetic and done totally from an injustice of Rick's being in the public eye."

"I think the 'Behind the Music' was good also for what it said about who Rick was as a person and musician during his life, including the interviews with his friends and musicians who were influenced by him. Like Paul McCartney, for instance, who was shown in a clip singing 'Lonesome Town.' What the show didn't mention, however, was that Paul (McCartney) was getting ready to work with Rick to produce a new album at the time of his death. We can only imagine what kind of work they could have done together. But for me the show overall just echoed stories I've heard from people I've met on tour, people who come up to me and talk about their memories of Rick with tears in their eyes. Rick really appreciated the fans in his day, and he always signed autographs for them and paid attention to them when he met them at his shows, both in the early days of his career and later on. I'm sure his memory carries the same emotional impact for them as it does for Gunnar and I. These days, it's like every time I play one of his songs, it keeps his presence around," Matthew Nelson said.

"We're playing to new audiences all the time, and for them I'm sure it feels like they're getting back something that's been gone for a long time. But the truth is Gunnar and I were best friends with Rick when he was alive, and what these shows are about is doing him and his music justice and waving his flag."
Matthew Nelson

Currently living in Nashville, the Nelsons have been working on two forthcoming album projects, one for a major label and the other independent, in which the duo hopes to take a fresh, roots-country direction with their music. They also plan to be working with EMI/MCA Records to oversee a long-term CD-reissue project of all of Rick Nelson's original studio albums.

Convergence of color and calligraphy

Qingxiong Ma combines best of eastern and western art

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

East is east and west is west and the twain shall never meet, or so goes the old adage.

But Qingxiong Ma, a Chinese-American brushstroke artist living in the Boston area, seems to have other thoughts on the matter.

Twelve of Ma's large-canvas brushstroke paintings are on display at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset through Feb. 24. The exhibit, titled simply "Chinese Brushstroke on Canvas," displays not only what the artists sees as a convergence of traditional eastern and western painting styles but also another merging already inherent in centuries of Eastern Chinese art. The art of calligraphy, usually synonymous with Chinese writing technique to westerners, is so close in relation to the culture's methods of painting that the term applies to those as well.

Calligraphy, or the brushstroke technique involved, is naturally the basis of Ma's tradition-based artistic training. But the latest development in his art, as viewed in the SSAC show, is his attempts to blend the Chinese traditions with what he's observed in the values of American and western painting. Along with the paintings on the walls, the gallery features long scrolls made of handmade rice paper hanging from its ceiling and bearing Chinese characters in bold calligraphy, including the words of an ancient Eastern poem, "On the Stork Tower," which Ma said expresses the philosophy behind his work.

Qingxiong Ma talks to elementary school students from Hingham's Foster School about his exhibit at the South Shore Art Center.

"New Branches" is one of a dozen works Chinese-American artist Qingxiong Ma is showing at Cohasset's South Shore Art Center through Feb. 24.

"My paintings in this show are done in the traditional Chinese medium," said Ma, "which is acrylic on canvas using the Chinese horsehair brush. Chinese painting was originally done on silk or canvas, long before paper. This was because the silk and paper were more absorbent. Acrylic-like materials became very popular in painting with mineral colors, or blue and green non-transparent pigments, around the time of the Song Dynasty (960 AD). Acrylics are similar to these because they are strong and non-transparent."

"Western painting is different from Chinese in that it uses stronger colors, more like what was done in China during the Song Dynasty. But a lot of Westerners believe that if the colors in Chinese painting are not as strong, they're also a lot more simple, when actually the colors and blends of colors are more complex. So what I'm trying to do is blend the strength of Western colors with the complexity of Chinese colors," Ma said.

Ma, 56, was born in Guangdong, China, and before emigrating to the U.S., received a number of artistic honors and awards, including election to the Academy of Chinese Painting. Since 1991, the artist has hosted numerous one-man gallery exhibitions around Massachusetts, including one show last year at the Art Complex in Duxbury, and currently he teaches Chinese painting at the South Shore Art Center, the DeCordova Museum School in Lincoln, the Boston and Cambridge adult education centers and elsewhere.

The relation between writing and painting calligraphy may be evident in Ma's dozen exhibit works to even the casual observer. The title subject of "New Branches," for instance, are, as the artist is quick to point out, quite similar to brushstroke calligraphy in shape and form.

"New Branches" is also one of several natural subject studies in the show with a coming-of-spring theme, along with the budding pine tree image of "Expecting," and the self-descriptive "Impression of Spring" and "Spring Is Not Far Away." The last-two named, along with other richly textured landscape pieces such as "Mt. Huang in Morning Mist," "Grand Canyon," "Summer Dream" and "The Joy of Winter" display vast, expansive qualities that seem to convey the depth of ancient Chinese history as much as of the landscapes themselves.

"Eastern art is more concerned than many Western forms with spirit, energy, concept and soul," Ma said. "In this way, even empty spaces between images can give forth energy to complete the full picture. For this reason, Van Gogh was very influenced by Eastern painting."

7-Minute Polenta

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Polenta is both a name for coarsely ground cornmeal as well as the Italian equivalent of cornmeal mush. (Polenta can be loose and creamy, thick, or subsequently baked into dense blocks.) The great mystery of polenta (the cooked variety) is that Italian cookbooks tell you that it takes at least 30 to 90 minutes of cooking to make it. Refusing to stand by the stove for half an hour stirring anything, much less cornmeal mush, I set out to make polenta in 10 minutes or less. Nuts to the traditionalists.

The first thing I noticed about polenta recipes is that they have little in common. Starting with 1 1/2 cups of coarsely ground cornmeal, one recipe uses 4 cups of water, another 7 cups, and a third uses 8 cups. The cooking times range from 30 minutes to 90 minutes (in a double boiler) yet the quicker cooking recipes use twice as much water as the slow-cooked version, a culinary anomaly if there ever was one.

I began testing with 1 1/2 cups of coarsely ground cornmeal and 4 cups of water. Many recipes warn about adding the cornmeal too quickly - some even suggest that this process takes 5 minutes. In fact, the cornmeal can be added in about 30 seconds as long as one keeps stirring. As for cooking time, I just don't know how one could possibly cook the mixture for 45 minutes. It was creamy and thick in 5 to 7 minutes, had a nice corn flavor, and had a bit of texture from the cornmeal

Italian cooking experts warn that quick-cooked polenta is harsh and bitter which is simply not true. In fact, I prefer 7-minute polenta because the texture is more interesting. (I suspect that the coarse cornmeal traditionally used in Italy may, in fact, take longer to cook. Nobody has bothered to adjust the cooking times to reflect the American product.)

Next, I investigated the varieties of cornmeal available at retail. The first is coarsely ground which is often referred to as polenta. In natural grocery stores it is also called corn grits. This is the type of cornmeal I was using in the testing and it worked well. Next, I tried a fine cornmeal that is sold by Quaker and Arrowhead Mills among others. (Quaker lists other ingredients on the package; Arrowhead is made just from corn.) Both brands produced polenta that was tasteless, slimy, mushy, and lumpy no matter how carefully I added the cornmeal. Instant polenta, which is precooked cornmeal, is available in 500g packages and sold under a variety of different labels. It cooked in 2 to 3 minutes and made decent polenta although the coarsely ground variety is better. Use it in a pinch.

As for other ingredients, many recipes suggest that half of the water may be substituted for milk or chicken stock. I tried milk, half-and-half and light cream and preferred the batch made with half-and-half. It was creamy without being overpowering. The stock added an unwelcome flavor that detracted from the pure corn taste I was looking for. Of course, the polenta needs salt - I added 1 1/2 teaspoons to the boiling water. Two other common ingredients are butter and cheese. I added 4 tablespoons butter and 1/2 cup grated cheese off the heat. I also added a few grinds of black pepper. My favorite cheese was Parmesan although I liked fontina as well. Ingredients tested and rejected include garlic, onion, bay leaf, cloves, cinnamon stick, olive oil, and bits of chopped herbs. This is one dish for which simplicity is key - don't muck it up with four-star chef ingredients.

This dish can be served with just about any tomato sauce - Bolognese is especially good. It is also good with oven-roasted sausages, any kind of braised meat or poultry, or a sauté of mushrooms. It can also be used instead of rice or noodles as a side dish to a stew. Like cornmeal mush, it can be served for breakfast with honey, cinnamon sugar, or hot maple syrup.

7-MINUTE POLENTA

It is important to use coarsely ground cornmeal which is also sold as polenta or corn grits. Do NOT use finely ground cornmeal.

4 cups water
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
1 1/2 cups coarse cornmeal
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 cup grated Parmesan or fontina cheese
Freshly ground black pepper to taste

In a medium saucepan bring the water to a boil. Add the salt and then gradually add the polenta while stirring. Reduce the heat to maintain a simmer, stirring constantly. The polenta should be smooth and large bubbles will pop on the surface. Cook until very thick but not stiff, about 5 to 7 minutes. This will vary slightly on the grind of the polenta and the freshness of the grain. Off heat add the butter, cheese and pepper. Serve immediately.

Serves 4 to 6 as a side dish.

RICH AND CREAMY POLENTA

Substitute 2 cups half-and-half for 2 cups of the water.

INSTANT POLENTA

Using the partially cooked version of the grain, called instant polenta, follow the above recipe reducing the cooking time to 2 to 3 minutes.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13

A mixed bag of planetary influences can make for a hectic day. Wake up in a good mood. A lunar alignment to Saturn is in effect between 6:05-9:05 a.m. Focus on the positives of a situation rather than getting caught up in the limitations. The sun and Uranus conjoin at 25-degrees of Aquarius, adding an element of surprise. Projects may take unexpected turns. Keep an open mind; go with the flow. You may experience sudden flashes of insight and achieve breakthroughs in understanding. Mercury enters Aquarius at 12:20 p.m., remaining there until March 11. The moon continues to travel in intuitive Pisces.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14

At 2:43 a.m. the Pisces moon forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Pluto and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. No major planetary activity occurs. This is a wonderful day to kick back, relax and enjoy life. Making major commitments, purchases or launching new ventures are not advised.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15

At 4:26 a.m. the moon enters Aries, highlighting new beginnings. Pull out all the stops. This is one of the best days of the month for starting new enterprises. Carefully organize your time, so that you can be productive. Don't jump to conclusions or go to extremes between 2:27-5:27 p.m., when the moon aligns with Jupiter. Put on our party hat tonight. This evening rates high for social, romantic activities.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16

Get an early start to this day. Above-average planetary influences continue in the morning and early afternoon. Channel high energy constructively. New is in; old is out. Launch important projects, promote ideas, initiate relationships. The moon travels in enthusiastic Aries, and a harmonious alignment of Venus and Jupiter occurs at 1:18 p.m. A lunar alignment to Mars in the late evening warns you to slow down, chill out.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 17

An Aries moon continues to set a fast pace. Get back in the swing of favorite sports or exercise routines. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can get them out of the way in short time. The moon aligns with the sun at 2:55 p.m. and becomes inactive. Influences turn around completely at 4:58 p.m., when the moon enters Taurus. An applying alignment of Venus and Saturn urges you to maintain a positive attitude. Count your blessings. Don't let doubt, fear or frustration creep in.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 18

This is a morning that can go either way. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. Venus forms a challenging 90-degree contact to Saturn at 8:13 a.m. In addition, a lunar alignment to Neptune can make for a slow start. On the other hand, influences are prime for kicking back, veging out and enjoying the good things in life. The sun enters Pisces at 3:14 p.m., remaining there until March 20.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 19

The moon continues its travel in steady Taurus, active until 6:34 p.m. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. You can get a lot accomplished today. Rest, relax and recharge your batteries this evening.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20

The moon enters Gemini at 3:50 a.m., setting a quick pace today and tomorrow. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 7:02 a.m., signaling the buildup to a full moon on February 27. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, prepares to form a flowing 120-degree alignment to Saturn. That means that today's influences are favorable for signing contracts, launching new enterprises. All communications get the green light; write letters, send e-mails, make phone calls.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21

Take it slow and easy this morning. Storm clouds move in between 10:31 a.m.-1:31 p.m., when the Gemini moon opposes Pluto. Think before you say or do anything you will later regret. Fortunately, this planetary influence moves out quickly, and the remainder of the day and evening rates high across the board. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22

At 2:53 a.m. the Gemini moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive until 11:16 a.m. Avoid rigid time schedules; there may be unexpected distractions or delays. Finish old business and don't start anything new until 11:16 a.m., when the moon enters the sign Cancer. Planetary action points to an above-average afternoon and evening. If you have work projects to accomplish, important decisions to make or contracts to sign, don't delay. Influences are prime for new starts across the board. In addition, the evening is great for socializing. Gather with friends and family; let the good times roll.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23

The moon travels in the sign Cancer this weekend, placing the focus on family and domestic responsibilities. Influences rate high for purchasing or selling land, property, household appliances. Give extra time and attention to children, pets. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Jupiter generates an upbeat mood, making this another great evening for partying.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 24

Conflicting planetary influences set the stage for a morning that can go either way. The Cancer moon forms a challenging 90-degree contact to combative Mars at 8:39 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Choose your words carefully. Don't rock the boat. On the other hand, an alignment of Mercury and Neptune prompts you to spend time alone. Pursue activities that help you to relax and unwind. Storm clouds move out at 2:36 p.m., when the moon enters playful Leo. The evening is prime for enjoying favorite friends, food, conversation.

Award-winning plants for the landscape

Green thumbs up

Part 1

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

High above the frozen earth in the stark, bare branches of a grand old cherry tree, the resonating call of a brilliant, scarlet red cardinal pierced the still morning air on a damp, gray day in early February. From a distance, a faint reply drifted across the landscape. The cheerful melodies of these handsome, crested dignitaries offered the promise that other signs of springtime might soon appear. As the skies darkened and a chilly drizzle began to fall, I retreated indoors to browse through catalogs, magazines and reference books and to dream of the beauty resting beneath the soil.

The month of February is an ideal time to plan new gardens and research potential acquisitions for the landscape. With so many plants from which to chose, however, the selection process can become quite overwhelming. Through the years, plant specialists have sought to provide guidance to gardeners by designating exceptional plants with various awards and titles.

The Cary Award is particularly noteworthy as it recognizes distinctive woody plants for our New England region. Since 1997, the Worcester County Horticultural Society has bestowed this honor on nearly two dozen plants in an effort to encourage gardeners to grow outstanding plants that may not be particularly well known but thrive in our local area. Named for Edward Cary, an exceptional plantsman from Shrewsbury, MA, local horticulturists nominate and vote for these plants each year. Garden centers offer many of these award-winning plants, often displaying a Cary Award blue ribbon label.

There are three Cary Award winners for this year including two shrubs, Rhododendron yakusimanum 'Ken Janek' and Seven-Son Flower (Heptacodium miconioides), and a tree, Cornus kousa, commonly known as the Korean dogwood. All three of these plants have been growing in my own garden for a number of years, trouble free with minimal care.

I discovered the family of 'yak' rhododendrons years ago and fell instantly in love with these slow-growing, compact shrubs. Their small stature made them ideal specimens for the garden and foundation plantings plus the soft, suede-like covering found on the underside of the leaves and on new foliage and buds was irresistible. This fuzzy coating, known as indumentum, may be cinnamon-brown, beige or nearly white, as it is in 'Ken Janek'. Deep pink flower buds open to form large pale pink trusses which fade to white on a shrub that grows only four to six inches a year, eventually reaching three feet in height. Provide evergreen rhododendrons with a moisture-retentive, well-drained soil and protection from sun and wind during the winter months to prevent desiccation of the foliage.

A more recent addition to my shrub border, the Seven-Son Flower (Heptacodium miconioides) offers numerous desirable attributes. This little known, vigorous shrub from China can potentially reach a height of 15 feet. Shiny, dark green leaves are attractive all season long with clusters of seven, tiny, fragrant, white flowers appearing in early autumn. Showy, reddish-pink sepals persist into November. A mature specimen exhibits gorgeous, exfoliating bark for lovely winter appeal. Tolerant of drought and salt, Heptacodium will thrive in a wide range of conditions but prefers a moderately fertile, well-drained soil in sun to partial shade.

Cornus kousa has been rapidly gaining in popularity in recent years due to its resistance to dogwood anthracnose. It is more densely branched and upright in habit than its American counterpart, Cornus florida, and its blossoms appear three weeks later. White flower bracts are star-like in form and appear on the upper side of the branches once the trees have fully leafed-out. Attractive red fruits that resemble raspberries or cherries appear in autumn and are favored by wildlife during the winter months. Peeling bark reveals lighter patches on mature specimens. Adaptable to sun or partial shade, the Korean dogwood and its cultivars perform best in well-drained soils and may be trained as a single-stemmed tree or a multi-stemmed shrub reaching an ultimate height of 25 feet at maturity.

Previous Cary Award winners in the tree category include two types of Magnolias, Magnolia stellata 'Centennial' and Magnolia 'Leonard Messel'. Each of these trees demonstrates spectacular spring flowers, lovely pewter-gray, speckled bark, and large, fuzzy, silky-gray flower buds that appear in late summer and are attractive throughout the winter months. Grow in moist, well-drained, acid soils, preferably in a sunny locale.

The Japanese Stewartia, a 1997 recipient, produces lovely, plump buds in late spring that open around the 4th of July to reveal waxy white blossoms with a prominent cluster of yellow stamens in the center. The smooth, pewter gray bark exfoliates to reveal creamy white patches. Tolerant of partial shade, the stewartia performs best in moisture-retentive, well-drained soils.

The elegant form of the weeping Alaska cedar, Chamaecyparis nootkatensis 'Pendula', graces my front walk where its evergreen, cascading branches serve as a screen for parked cars and a source of year-round interest. The 'Donald Wyman' crabapple was acknowledged last year for its handsome, glossy foliage, white flowers and prolific, persistent, bright red fruit. Both species prefer well-drained soils in full sun. Rounding out the list of Cary award trees are the Cornelian cherry (Cornus mas), a member of the dogwood family, whose bright yellow flowers appear in late winter and produce red, edible fruits, and the Japanese tree lilac (Syringa reticulata), which displays large clusters of showy, fragrant, white flowers in late spring.

Encore for plaza plan

Owner back with proposal

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Donald Staszko, owner of Cohasset Plaza on Route 3A, doesn't give up.

The local businessman, is back again this year with plans to expand the Route 3A shopping center anchored by Super Stop & Shop.

And with the state fiscal crisis looming — the estimated $100,000 in tax dollars that a large, new retail store could bring to town — could look good enough to Town Meeting voters to tip the odds in Staszko's favor this year.

This is the third time in four years, the Beach Street resident will ask Town Meeting for a zoning change to set the stage for the expansion. Zoning by-law amendments require a 2/3 vote on the floor of Town Meeting.

The article is not a carbon copy of the one voted on last year that missed winning the necessary 2/3 majority by only four votes. Town Meeting rules don't allow a failed article to appear two years in a row.

"We're taking the same article and tweaking it a bit," Staszko told selectmen last week. "The words are changed but not the end result."

Under the current bylaw when a district boundary line divides a lot, a use permitted on one portion of the lot may be extended into the other portion by up to 200 feet with a special permit. But this allowance does not apply to property, such as Cohasset Plaza, which is in the watershed protection district. The proposed amendment would lift that restriction and allow the property owner to apply to the Zoning Board for a special permit.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he thinks the expansion of the plaza would be beneficial to the town.

"I've been in favor of this for years now," he said. "It could add approximately $100,000 in additional revenue to the tax base."

Although they have not yet voted to recommend the article, selectmen gave the proposal a warm reception last week. Selectmen, the Capital Budget Committee and the Advisory Committee supported the plaza expansion article before Town Meeting last year that would have extended the highway business district by 200 feet to the rear of Local sergeant named chief

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The long, somewhat exhausting, search for a new police chief has finally come to an end.

On Tuesday, Town Manager Mark Haddad announced that he will appoint Sgt. Robert W Jackson as the new chief.

While selectmen still need to ratify the appointment, and a contract needs to be negotiated, it's anticipated that Jackson will assume the role on March 8.

"I'm flattered, honored and humbled," Jackson said. "Both my family and I are extremely happy and are looking forward to new challenges."

"I'm flattered, honored and humbled."

— Sergeant Bob Jackson

Jackson was picked after a grueling search process that eventually narrowed down a field of more than 50 candidates to four. The four finalists were paraded around town and interviewed by various groups including representatives from the School Committee, department heads and the police union. Jackson was the only local finalist, the others hailed from Fitchburg, New Bedford and Westfield.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, a member of the police search committee, feels Jackson is going to be a great fit. "The process was really great," she said. "We were able to see the candidates interacting with people in town and one person just rose above the rest."

Jackson also agreed the process was beneficial noting that it helped him get the feel for concerns around the community.

Appointing a police chief was a career first for Haddad, who said the process worked well.

"I wanted participation from as many groups as

CHS grad on Survivor 4

Show premiers Feb. 28 on CBS

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Maybe she got her start climbing on the ledges around town. Perhaps she practiced her survival skills on Sandy Beach.

Regardless, Cohasset High School's own Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien, who graduated in 1972, will be appearing on Survivor 4 to air on CBS, starting Feb. 28. The newest Survivor takes place on Tahiti's island of Nuku Hiva in the Marquesas Archipelago in the South Pacific, a far cry from Cohasset.

The 16 contestants were flown out to the island and had to fend for themselves for more than a month.

In an interview conducted by email, Vavrick-O'Brien said she fondly remembers her days in town.

"I have the best memories of going to the beach, sailing constantly out of the harbor on warm summer days, the yacht club, such good friends, the Music Circus and pool hopping at night," she said. "I'm so proud of being from Cohasset, I miss it."

Several of her former classmates vaguely remember Vavrick-O'Brien, who was only in town two years, being in their graduating class but couldn't recall what she was like in high school.

But that didn't deter their excitement of having a peer on the show.

"I think it's really neat someone from my class is on that show," said David Marks. "I'll definitely be watching it now."

Vavrick-O'Brien transferred to Cohasset High School in 1971 but still became a cheerleader. In her senior yearbook quotes she lists "being content in a little house in San Francisco" as her ambition and her favorite expression as, "aahhhhhh—neat." She was also part of the homecoming court in her senior year.

Vavrick-O'Brien said she wants to come back to town after the show finishes airing to talk about her experiences.

No room for local history

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

With the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III" about to make its debut, the Town History Committee and Ruth Fennessey, the curriculum director for Cohasset schools, are trying to find a way to incorporate the book into the school history program.

According to all of the parties involved, the book would serve as a great resource for students to study the history of the town.

However, because of MCAS restrictions it's proving difficult to find a way to involve the book.

"Because of the (curriculum) framework for each grade, we don't really have an opportunity in the curriculum to include the book," Fennessey said.

The "framework" is distributed to Massachusetts' schools every few years. Cohasset received the latest guidelines from the Department of Education in December.

"When we get the frameworks it means we have to completely re-do our curriculum and align it with what the Department of Education expects, and what's going to be on the MCAS," she said.

The current guidebook for the history and social science curriculums for kindergarten through 12th grade does not ask teachers to spend much time on local history.

In grade three, the guide book states students should be able to: "locate places on contemporary and historical maps of the United States, New England, Massachusetts and the local community."

But besides for that brief reference, the history of local communities is hardly mentioned to the dismay of some.

"When I began writing the book, I kind of assumed it would be used in the schools," said author Jacqueline Dormitzer. "It's a shame that the state restricts the curriculum so much."

While she was writing the book, Dormitzer tried to provide the background of some current town issues in an effort to inform students on the process it takes to correct problems. She also included significant information on the role of different boards in Cohasset so students, and the public, could better understand how the government works.

Dormitzer thinks the book could be used by students, but also could be used by teachers as a reference book.

"Ideally, I would have loved to

'No left turn' signs

Linda Maria Falconiero wrote to selectmen stating "No Left Turn" signs at the Exxon Station exits onto Route 3A might help make the Beechwood/3A intersection safer.

A representative from MassHighway told selectmen earlier this month that six of the 29 accidents during the period of time studied in a recent analysis of the safety of the intersection occurred because people turned left out of the gas station.

"When doing this, with cars stopped for the light going northbound," Falconiero wrote. "It is very obvious that there isn't a clear view of the southbound traffic. They just turn into oncoming traffic."

She stated "No Left Turn" on the 3A gas station exits, would force everyone to exit onto Beechwood and then go on their way using the traffic light.

"I have no knowledge of how much the new traffic light and road set up would cost, but it seems a couple of signs could cost less and be effective."

The proposal for the intersection included installing a tiered-light system that would include an arrow to allow left turns at the intersection.

Onboard SBA fight

The Town of Norwood has notified Town Manager Mark Haddad that the Norwood Board of Selectmen voted to support Cohasset's efforts to ensure the School Building Assistance program be funded at the levels that would provide the necessary reimbursement to cities and towns within five years. Cohasset, which has $40 million in school building projects underway and stands to receive 60 percent reimbursement from the SBA, has taken the lead in the effort to lobby the state Department of Education not to cut back on SBA funding. Delayed reimbursement could add upwards of $800 annually to the average real estate tax bill in town and will similarly affect other towns across the state that have school building projects waiting for reimbursement.

Sign variance for bank branch

The Zoning Board of Appeals has issued a sign variance for the new branch of the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank on Rte. 3A and Brewster Road.

The bank needed a variance to substitute two eight-foot square signs for a single, 25-square-foot sign, and to have eight, three-square-foot directional signs instead of the unlimited number of one-square-foot directional signs allowed by right.

The eight-foot square signs will provide signage for the new building that includes the bank logo. The directional signs will direct traffic through the parking lot and drive-through service.

The board said the corner lot and no direct entrance off 3A constitute circumstances unique to this site and said the proposed signage could enhance public safety. The board also said the variance would give the applicant signage similar to that found elsewhere in the highway district.

The signs must conform exactly to the drawings submitted by David Hassan of Hassan Sign. The complete text of the Zoning Board decision is available at the Town Clerk's office.

Short St. trees to come down

Town Manager Mark Haddad said several trees on Short Street will come down. The Advisory Committee authorized the necessary transfer of funds, he said.

Tree warden Andy Swanson recommended that five, dead Norway maples be removed at an estimated cost of $2,600.

But Jim Shipsky, 58 Doane St., told selectmen recently that the town should, "think globally and act locally." He said he is concerned there is too much carbon dioxide in the air and trees help eliminate this problem. He said the trees on Short Street should not be removed.

"This is a great opportunity for the town to start looking at the trees as our friends rather than our enemy," he said.

Coleman Nee, 12 Short St., wrote to Haddad urging the trees be taken down because they present a real danger.

"Both of the trees in the front of my property are leaning toward my house," he stated. "If either or both were to fall, they would crash into either my three-year-old son's or one-year-old daughter's bedroom.

"In the past two years, one of the trees has caused close to $3,000 worth of damage to our vehicle with falling branches."

Nee said he had heard of objections to the tree removal and would appear before selectmen if necessary to make the case why the trees should come down.

Haddad said Tuesday that wouldn't be necessary. He said the trees have rotted out at the bottom and Swanson has the authority to have them taken down.

Flags to fly at new memorial

The Cohasset Veterans Memorial Committee announced American Flags would fly at the Gold Star Mothers Memorial on the anniversaries of the days when Cohasset lost soldiers in World War I, World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

The flags will fly 20 days during the year on the dates Cohasset lost men, two made the supreme sacrifice on Feb. 25, according to Glenn Pratt of the Veterans Memorial Committee

The flags will be flown at least one day each month of the year, except June and September, months in which no Cohasset servicemen lost their lives.

The flags will be flown at least one day each month of the year, except June and September, months in which no Cohasset servicemen lost their lives.

During World War I in 1918 and Vietnam in 1969, Cohasset paid the heaviest price for freedom with the loss of five men in each of those years, followed by three in 1944 and two in 1945.

ZBA rules on home additions

The Zoning Board of Appeals denied the application of Peter and Gillian O'Connell for a special permit to expand their house at 31 Stockbridge St. because of the intrusion of the proposed additions into the front-yard area bordering Ennice Avenue. The board felt the intrusion would be "substantially more detrimental" to the neighborhood than the existing non-conformity of the 100-year-old house and create traffic congestion along Ennice Avenue. About eight feet of the existing house reaches within 5-1/2 feet of the lot line; the proposed additions would increase the length of the house within 5-1/2 feet of the lot line to about 43-1/2 feet.

The Zoning Board gave William Shelton and Margaret M. Fitzgerald a special permit to square off the northeasterly corner of their home at 491 Jerusalem Road and to construct two exterior stairways. But the board denied granting a special permit to add a second story over what is now the garage. The couple planned to use the garage and proposed second story as part of the home addition to add living space, specifically a music room on the first floor and bedroom on the second floor. The board said the second story over the garage would be "more detrimental" to the neighborhood. "The issue to this board is not only one of volumetrics (50 percent increase is significant by itself) but also of height: the new structure would greatly increase the visibility of what is today a relatively unassuming encroachment," the decision states. The existing garage is non-conforming because it is only 1.3 feet from the westerly lot line. The full text of the Zoning Board decisions is on file at the Town Clerk's office.

Employee fights off alleged robber

Suspect arrested later in Weymouth

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A local man, who was apparently opening up for the day at Frank Williams Landscaping Supplies on Rte. 3A in Cohasset, fought off an alleged attacker armed with a two-foot piece of steel, intent on robbing him of the day's cash last Thursday morning (Feb. 14).

Police said a 9-1-1 call came in at 8:31 a.m. from a clerk at Mary Lou's News across the street saying she could see a man on the ground who was bleeding profusely from a head wound. The landscape company employee, who lives in Cohasset, was apparently attacked just after he arrived but was able to pull the ski mask off the perpetrator and identify him, police said.

After a struggle, the suspect, who did not escape with any money, took off into Thayer and Whitney Woods, a large wooded area behind the landscaping business. The state police K-9 unit, state troopers, Hingham and Scituate police all assisted in the search that was called off at 11:30 a.m.

Cohasset police issued a warrant for the arrest of Norman W. Reinholter, Jr., 52, of 80 Holmes Ave. in Weymouth on charges of armed robbery while masked and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. Weymouth police arrested Reinholter later Thursday afternoon; he was arraigned on the charges Friday (Feb. 15) in Quincy District Court and held at the Dedham House of Correction on $10,000 cash bail. At a bail review hearing Tuesday (Feb 19) in Superior Court, the bail was reduced to $5,000 cash, Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said. Reinholter is slated to return to court for a pretrial conference March 8.

Police said the alleged victim identified Reinholter who had worked at the landscape business in the past.

Reinholter is known to police. He has a lengthy criminal history, Sgt. Jackson said.

The landscape employee pulled off the ski mask, left, allegedly worn by the suspect. At right is the money pouch, police say the suspect was after.

The employee, who was allegedly attacked was transported to South Shore Hospital. He sustained severe lacerations to his head and both hands. Police said his hands were injured as he tried to defend himself. He was admitted overnight to the hospital where he was listed in guarded condition later Thursday morning.

Police say Reinholter attacked the victim with a 20 in. by 4 in., flat steel bar that he may have found on the property. Sgt. Jackson said police are investigating whether there was an accomplice. If convicted, Reinholter could face up to 15 years in prison, he said.

Police said both Cohasset elementary schools were "locked down" as a precaution should the suspect have headed in that direction, and officials at the high school were told to be on alert.

Cohasset Supt. of Schools Edward Malvey said police kept in touch with the schools throughout the day.

"Although we felt secure and safe we sent the word out to the schools to lock down and have someone watching the front door at all times," Malvey said.

Reporter Evan Schiff contributed to this report.

VACATION WEEK

Hello Cohasset. What a beautiful week for school vacation even without the snow! The days are nice and sunny and so many activities are happening all around. Continue to enjoy the rest of it and make sure to let us know some of the fun things that you did. I have heard from skiers, snowboarders and some Disney travelers, it will be so much fun to hear what else was done during the week. Photos are welcome as well, make sure to label them and identify all the people in them.

XAVERIAN HONORS

Mark Lewis, Class of 2005, has been named to the honor roll for the second marking period at Xaverian Brothers High School. Mark's very proud parents are Mr. & Mrs. Kevin F. Lewis.

KENYON DEAN'S LIST

Torrey S. Androski, daughter of Peter Androski and the late M. Lee Androski has been named to the dean's list at Kenyon College for the first semester. Torrey had to maintain a 3.45 on the college's four-point grading scale to earn this honor.

Quilt show has its own story to tell

To benefit two children's charities

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

For the ninth year in a row, area residents will have an opportunity to see the best quilts in the South Shore area.

From 10:30 a.m.-2 p.m. March 2, the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue will showcase 65 quilts for the community.

Judy Tedeschi, member of the church and publicist for the event, said the art of quilting is alive and well.

"There's a whole tradition of quilting out there," she said. "It's something that really brings people together."

"People that enjoy quilting are going to love this event."
— Judy Tedeschi, Second Congregational Church

The event is for the benefit of two programs, the Pediatric AIDS Charitable Trust and the Reach Out and Read program. While the quilts are not for sale, the money generated from ticket sales will go to these charities.

PACT is dedicated to raising, receiving and dispensing funds to offset care and services for children with AIDS in our inner city.

The Reach Out and Read is a program to make literacy part of regular pediatrics at Boston Medical Center. The hope is that by the time a child is five years old he or she will have a library of 10 books.

The church chose the two programs because it felt quilts represent a sort of comfort.

"We think of quilts as being warm and fuzzy," church secretary DeeDee Perry said. "The thought of these children curled under them is really special."

In the previous eight years of the benefit, the church has raised approximately $15,000 for the charities. The church is only able to accommodate about 175 people because of space restrictions which limits the amount of money it's able to collect. While none of the quilts are on sale, two of them on display will be auctioned off at a later date.

The idea of the benefit began eight years ago when a member of the church went to New Hampshire and saw a exhibit at a church there.

"We all thought it would be a great idea and we have the perfect space to display them," Perry said.

Tedeschi said it's the stories behind the quilts, as well as the beauty of them, that makes the event so successful.

"There's amazing stories behind the quilts," she said. "People that enjoy quilting are going to love this event."

Perry said quilting has made resurgence in the last few years.

"The nice part about our event is it isn't a competition, it is an exhibit," she said.

Quilts seem to always have a story and these are no exception. There are all kinds of stories behind the quilts, some of which date back to the 1800s.

Some of the quilts on display at last year's Quilt Show at the Second Congregational Church.

Susi Coley, 61 Elm St., will display a quilt her great grandmother owned. In the program she states that, her great grandmother lived in the plains of Nebraska in an earth house created in the hillside.

"She spent many frigid nights securely tucked under this quilt," she wrote.

Another fascinating quilt story comes from Carolyn Shanley, who lives in Marshfield.

When she started dating her husband, a merchant seaman, she began working on her first quilt. When he would leave every few months and asked his wife what she planned to do, she would reply, "work on the quilt."

It took Shanley 12 years to complete the quilt but she finally did and is now working on others.

Along with perusing the various quilts, visitors will be able to enjoy a lunch provided by the church.

Tedeschi encouraged residents to purchase their tickets early because it is expected to sell out soon. Tickets are $10 that includes lunch and can be bought through the church at 781-383-0345 or by stopping by the church office from 9 a.m.-1 p.m., Monday-Friday. You may also send a check payable to The Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Bury those wires

Take a good look at the village before you head to the March 30 Town Meeting. We were there Saturday for coffee and a croissant at French Memories. South Main Street was buzzing with activity. Some people were shopping, others were running errands and still others, like us, were taking a few minutes to visit with a friend over a cappuccino.

Over the past decade, Cohasset has decixded to make the village a focus – to embrace it. The same way the harbor and the ocean are so much a part of the town, the village and pristine Town Common also add to the very fabric of the place.

Thanks to that commitment — which has included entities such as the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation and village task forces, and residents supporting local shops — our village is working. Some would argue therefore, nothing needs to be improved there.

But because we're so accustomed to the spot, we might not see how much it could be spruced up. The same way you might not notice how worn your living room sofa is, or if your draperies need replacing, until someone points it out to you.

The sidewalks, in which telephone pole after telephone pole are embedded, are long past needing replacement. Sure, they do the job of providing a surface for us to walk on – but an upgrade there would no doubt put a spring in our step and brighten the entire village..

So while the sidewalk project moves ahead it makes perfect sense to get rid of the telephone poles at the same time. Installing underground conduit for the wires can be easily accomplished while the sidewalks are being torn up.

Town Meeting voters will be asked to authorize a utility surcharge to pay for burying wires in the village. The total cost for the average homeowner is expected to be about $50 a year for about six years.

We agree with the Planning Board that this is a "neat" idea. But the Planning Board decided not to vote to support the article because of the cost. However, once those new sidewalks go in, the town would be unlikely to rip them out to bury wires at a later date – so it's probably now or never, for the wires project.

Having a vital "downtown" can be a rarity today. If you travel across our great land, more often than not, the "Main Streets" of America are beleaguered, desolate ghost towns with boarded up windows, seedy-looking shops and litter blowing in the wind.

That's clearly not Cohasset and we don't think it ever will be. But an investment in a new look for our village that includes getting rid of those poles and wires can ensure it continues to thrive.

Election policy for candidates

The Cohasset Mariner will announce the first of four "Questions of the Week" in next week's issue (Feb. 28). The answers will appear the following week (March 7), along with a new question. Questions will be posed to the three candidates for two seats on the Board of Selectmen and for the School Committee candidate who is running unopposed for the open seat on that board.

Candidates for all positions, boards and committees – whether contested or uncontested – are welcome to submit formal statements announcing their candidacies along with a photograph. Candidates are also welcome to submit short items – no more than 150 words – announcing coffees and the like.

The Cohasset Mariner will run an election guide with information on the candidates for selectmen and school committee, along with a sample ballot, in the April 4 issue for the April 6 Town Election.

The Cohasset Mariner will not accept letters from candidates or letters endorsing or opposing any candidate but welcomes letters on the issues.

Anyone with suggestions for a Question of the Week, should e-mail editor Mary Ford at mford@cnc.com.

Support for Harborwalk

TO THE EDITOR:

Mr. Fred Koed, Chairman,
Cohasset Board of Selectmen

On behalf of the volunteers and supporters of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC), we hereby express our serious disappointment in your request that we stop public forums for proposed improvements to the harbor and surrounding areas. It is our understanding that this directive was issued in response to concerns raised by a few residents who have questioned the need for any harbor area improvements, and the public planning process sponsored by the CRC.

More than $450,000 has been donated by residents and business owners in support of the public design process which has provided community forums; developed engineered design images and drawings; helped to secure grants for the town; and has allocated resources to beautification efforts in the village. In light of these contributions, we believe that more respect is owed to the CRC and its supporters who should have, at least, been consulted before a formal position was expressed by your board.

Over the past year and a half, the CRC has worked diligently to promote and foster an open community dialogue to improve infrastructure and streetscape conditions within the village and harbor areas of the town. The village public design and workshop process spearheaded by the CRC, in partnership with the town's Village Revitalization Task Force, was instrumental in helping the community form the consensus we have today for the planned improvements. The CRC is sponsoring the same public process for the Harbor area, and thus we are confident that this open dialogue will bring community consensus on improvement ideas as well.

Though the reasons for your position to stop the harbor planning process are unclear to us at the moment, we would like to make a few comments regarding your actions. There appears to be a notion that ideas and concerns brought forward from a majority of members of the community are not being incorporated into the design process. We disagree. The CRC has incorporated several ideas shared in these very early design stages, and continue to welcome input from every member of the community. Many individuals have expressed support in improving the walkway conditions around the harbor, the ideas presented, and the public design process underway. As evident during the village design process, not all ideas can be incorporated at one time; and an idea not pictured in a current image should not be interpreted as an idea not being considered as a design option. Please keep in mind that there have been only two public workshops thus far, and not every idea or option can be thoroughly discussed or presented during a two-hour workshop.

We understand the current state of the economy and realize that fiscal pressures on municipal finances limit the likelihood that town funds will be available to implement all of the proposed improvements. Just as in the village design process, the CRC is covering the costs of the preliminary planning studies and will help the community apply for grant funding to implement the improvements. If you recall, in a December meeting with Dean Rizzo, your board gave the CRC authorization to research available state and federal grant programs to help fund this initiative. In addition, you are well aware of the fact that all improvement plans and town funding allocations is subject to approval from your board and Town Meeting, guaranteeing town oversight and control in the process.

We believe that the community planning process established by the CRC should continue. In an effort to strengthen this dialogue and partnership with the town, we recommend that you establish a committee immediately (similar to the Village Revitalization Task Force) to work with the CRC in the generation of a community-supported harbor walkway improvement plan by the end of April. In order to achieve this goal, it is imperative that we maintain the momentum generated by continuing the design and public discussion process already underway.

Committee Representation could consist of the following:

Planning Department—1. Harbor Committee—1. Friends of Cohasset Harbor—1. Historical Commission—1. Government Island Com.—1. Residents—3. Board of Selectmen—1.

In addition, we ask the Board of Selectmen to rescind, in writing, the request that the CRC no longer conduct any harbor-area public workshops.

Many individuals have contributed a great deal of time, energy and resources in the spirit of good community planning to address safety and public access concerns in the village and harbor areas of the town. We realized that a public/private partnership, such as this, can sometimes result in differing opinions. However, we believe that the community is better served when differences are dealt with directly and openly so that all points of view can be heard.

The Board of Directors:
Patricia Connors, Andrea Giroux, Robert Johnston, Peter Roy, Frank Smith, and Hubert Vanderlugt

The Mariner was provided a copy of this letter. At their meeting last week, selectmen rescinded their directive asking CRC to stop conducting harbor workshops.

Dog friendly

TO THE EDITOR

Re: "Keeping World's End Just the Way It Is"

The Trustees of Reservations have a jewel in the 251 acres known as "World's End." Unfortunately, it appears that predators such as fox and coyote are eliminating the squirrel, rabbit and neighboring cat population. It's too bad that there is an admission fee, but it does cost money to maintain even wilderness areas. I was disappointed that a recent proposal to afford boat access to the property was unfavorably considered. The State, the Trustees, local area towns and other conservation groups are more liberal in permitting access to most other pristine "gems."

Although I am a "dog lover," I do agree that some unleashed canines can be intimidating to people and stepping in "poop" is unpleasant and should not happen.

As an "FYI (for your information)," there is a park that is well maintained by the MDC that is about a five-minute car ride heading north on Route 3A. Stodders Park is just beyond the old Hingham Shipyard on the right. There is convenient parking and the MDC provides biodegradable poop bags as well as scoopers. If the owners maintain reasonable control over their dog(s), they do not have to be constrained on leashes. It is especially justifiable for the Trustees of Reservations to enforce a leash law at World's End when you realize that dog lovers can exercise their dogs at nearby Stodders Park.

Stodders Park offers about a six-tenths of a mile walk with pleasant rolling terrain and water views on three sides. Dogs swim, run off their nervous energy and actually learn how to "socialize" with their four footed friends. men, women and children banter while enjoying the surroundings.

Grassroots policies

TO THE EDITOR:

On Saturday, Feb. 2, the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee held its caucus along with towns and cities across the state. Delegates were elected to the Massachusetts Democratic Convention, which will be held in Worcester May 31 and June 1.

The large turnout of registered Democrats at the Cohasset Town Hall was impressive in both number and in enthusiasm as was the case in cities and towns state-wide. Many feel this was a tribute to the caliber of the four Democratic candidates for governor who are seeking a place on the primary ballot in November 2002. The caucus in Cohasset was an example of "every vote counts" as the vote tallies were, in several cases, very close.

I was proud and excited to be nominated and to win a delegate seat to the Democratic Convention. I am one of five delegates and four alternate delegates who will attend the convention to help select candidates for the primary this November. The Cohasset caucus was surely grass roots politics at its best! I am grateful to those who have given me and my daughter, Laurel, the opportunity to play a part in the Democratic process of selecting candidates for public office in the next state election.

CookieFest thanks

TO THE EDITOR

The Scituate Historical Society would like to thank Shaw's and Stop & Shop Supermarkets of Cohasset for their recent donations of cookies in support of the Society's CookieFest on Feb. 10. Overall more than 100 people attended the event, many of them visiting the Scituate Maritime & Irish Mossing Museum for the first time.

Selectman's race only one in town

Rec seat has no takers

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Three candidates, two positions, something has got to give. In what is the only race in the Town Election this year, selectmen Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris will try to hold off newcomer Roger Q. Hill.

Koed and McMorris are looking to build on their solid contributions to the town and both feel the town is in good hands and see no reason to shake things up.

However, Hill has thrown his hat into the ring and is ready to endure the vigors of running for a seat on the Board of Selectmen.

Hill is self-employed and a carpenter by trade. He also owns Hill Realty Trust.

"There are lawyers and doctors and rocket scientists on the board and what Cohasset needs is someone who is the voice of the town," he said.

Koed is seeking his second term as a selectman. He said the challenge the town now faces is advocating its causes in Boston on serious issues, such as the delayed funding of the School Building Assistance program.

Koed has also served on the Advisory Committee, the Housing Authority and the Water Commission.

"I think my service on several different boards serves me well," Koed said. "I think I know the issues and am prepared to deal with them."

McMorris is seeking her third term on the board and believes the town should focus on planning for the future including addressing the need for senior housing.

McMorris said with the turnover the town is experiencing that providing stability is important.

"The town is going to experience some major changes," she said. "It's important for the town to have stability on the board of selectmen."

There is no one running for one seat the Recreation Commission. Rec. Commissioners Mary Muncey and Lillian Curley are seeking re-election, but no one pulled papers for the seat being vacated by David Marks. The position could be filled by write-in votes or an appointment by the selectmen, Town Clerk Marion Douglas said.

The following candidates are also on the ballot:

- Glenn Pratt, 482 King St., Water Commission.
- Al Moore, Planning Board
- Ray Kasperowicz, Sewer Commission
- Robin Lawrence, Board of Health
- Marion Douglas, Town Clerk
- Jane Pescatore, School Committee
- Mary Granville, Board of Assessors
- Roger Lowe, Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees
- Sheila Evans, Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees
- Roger Whitley, Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustees
- Ralph Perroncello, Cohasset Housing Authority
- George Marlette, Town Moderator

The last day to register to vote for the April 6 Town Election is March 8.

Cohasset's reservoir full, despite drought advisory

The Aaron River Reservoir is full to the brim [see photo taken Feb. 9], and was full even before recent rain and snow, despite the fact that the entire East Coast is in a drought.

"While the Quabbin Reservoir is only 83.5 percent full, Cohasset's reservoir is 100 percent full," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "We literally could not get any more water into it. So far, Cohasset is weathering this drought very nicely.

"When full, the Aaron River Reservoir contains 323 million gallons of water," he said. "This should give confidence to the people of Cohasset that we have more than enough water for our needs now and into the future."

"Cohasset is weathering this drought very nicely."
— John McNabb, Water Commission

Cohasset's water supply, which includes Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir has a "safe yield" of 3.5 million gallons a day. This is much greater than the average demand of 680,000 gallons a day, the maximum daily demand of 1.7 million gallons a day, and the projected water demand 20 years or more into the future, even if the 500,000 gallons of water a day that Mass.-American Water wants to buy is added in, McNabb said.

"Cohasset has not had an outside watering ban since 1995," he said, "because of the massive size of our water supply. The outside watering bans we had in 1994 and 1995 were because of problems in our distribution system, which have been fixed."

"We urge people to avoid unnecessary use of water, nevertheless," McNabb said. "Water is a precious resource which should not be squandered."

Door opens for Beach Street house

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In what could be a controversial decision, the Conservation Commission voted 4-2 to approve a variance with conditions that could pave the way for a driveway off Beach Street providing access to a proposed luxury home in an area called Great Neck.

At the heart of the ongoing dispute is whether plans to remove ledge from the property to construct the 700-foot driveway require a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals.

Building Inspector Robert Egan doesn't think so because the ledge to be removed is for construction of the driveway, which would be exempt from the bylaw.

But Beach Street neighbors think the zoning board should weigh in, and so does Conservation Commissioner Deborah Cook.

"They (zoning board) should have the opportunity to look at this, that (ledge) bylaw was done so people couldn't do massive alterations to property," she said during the commission's Feb. 7 deliberations.

The Conservation Commission decision could be appealed. Richard Henderson, an attorney representing one of the Beach Street families was at the meeting. Although he declined to comment to the Mariner on whether an appeal is imminent, he did request that the tapes of the meeting be preserved.

Although Egan said owner David Walsh does not need a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals to remove ledge from the site, if it is determined that a special permit is required, Walsh will have to file for a new Notice of Intent to the Conservation Commission.

The Conservation Commission also asked for a performance bond of $20,000 that must be paid to the town before construction begins.

Walsh must also provide a maintenance agreement for the proposed drainage system, drainage structures, and detention pond, on the drainage system

Walsh needed a variance from the Conservation Commission to do work within the 50-foot buffer zone at the start of the proposed driveway.

The prior owner's efforts to obtain a building permit to develop what is now Walsh's property — known as lot #2 — were rejected by the building inspector because the slope of the driveway did not provide safe access.

But Walsh has designed a driveway that winds its way up the hill at the grade of a wheelchair ramp.

He plans to use about 50 percent of the blasted ledge on site that would be crushed for use in a variety of ways including the drainage system that would be installed along both sides of the driveway.

The Conservation Commission's jurisdiction was limited to activity within the 50- and 100-foot wetlands buffer zone — areas that make up a small part of the project.

While the project would disturb some 275 square feet within the 50-foot wetland buffer zone near Beach Street, rather than replicate the wetland, Walsh plans to install plantings in a 875-square-foot area that would enhance what is there now by providing wildlife habitat.

The decision will likely not sit well with Beach Street neighbors, who along with other interested citizens, have joined forces as the Great Neck Preservation Group to try and stop development of Walsh's lot and two others, owned by Ellen Morrissey. The group, which packed the public hearing on the issue last month, would like to see the land remain as open space and be incorporated into the adjacent Great Brewster Woods.

Walsh thanked the commission for its vote at the end of the Feb. 7 meeting.

Full text of the Conservation Commission decision is available at the commission's office on the second floor of Town Hall.

Why are we so surprised?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I must confess I missed the defining moment of the 2002 Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City. I was watching the traditional "half-pipe snowboarding" (whatever that is) or, everybody's favorite, "skeleton racing" at the time.

The event for which the current games will be known forever was the figure skating pairs, in which everyone — including those who can't tell a salchow from a death spiral — were certain that the gold medalists were the Canadians, Jamie Sale and David Pelletier.

The fact that four of the nine judges, those from Russia, the Ukraine, Poland and China, voted for the Russian pair of Yelena Berezhnaya and Anton Sikharulidze was a given. The Cold War lingers on in the shadowy corners of the Olympics.

The surprise was the judge from France, Marie-Reine Le Gougne, who broke with her Western allies and cast her vote for the pair from the former Evil Empire, too. Later she admitted that she was pressured into giving her vote to the Russians.

"Some people close to the judge have acted badly and have out someone who is honest and upright, but emotionally fragile, under pressure," said Didier Gailhaguet, head of the French Olympic team. "She is a fragile person and I think she has been somewhat manipulated."

Marie-Reine did not say how she was pressured. Was her family in France held hostage to insure her compliance? Was she threatened by a sniper with an Uzi in the upper reaches of the arena? Was her vote being traded for a Russian vote for a French athlete later in the games?

The International Skating Union surprised everyone by acting swiftly to grant gold medals to both the Russian and Canadian pairs, which is probably the first time in Olympic history that identical medals were awarded, one by the judges, the other by popular demand.

The thing that surprises me is that anyone is surprised at all.

What do they expect from a sport in which the friends of one skater (Tonya Harding) have been known to smite another (Nancy Kerrigan) mightily on the knee with a pipe in hopes that she would be incapacitated for an important competition?

The first time skating figured in the Olympic games in London in 1908 the judges gave a Swede, Ulrich Salchow, then the reigning champion, three votes for his compulsory figures and the Russian Nikolai Panin only two, whereupon Panin walked out.

Panin, incidentally, was an alias for Nikolai Kolomenkin, the member of a wealthy Russian family, who had to skate under a pseudonym since sport was wisely regarded as undignified in Czarist Russia.

Members of the audience bombarded the judges and the referee with oranges in Cortina d' Ampezzo, Italy, in 1956 when the popular German pair of Franz Ningel and 12-year-old Marika Kilius were consigned to a fourth-place finish.

There is a move afoot, I am told, to eliminate from the Olympics all those sports in which the winners are decided by vote of a panel of judges rather than by speed afoot or aski or askate, which would do away with about half the events of the current games.

In their place I would recommended "purring."

That's an old Welsh sport in which the contestants, wearing heavy shoes with reinforced toes, grasp each other by the shoulder and, when the ref gives the signal, start kicking each other in the shins. The first man to release his hold on the other's shoulders is the loser.

And no judgments needed.

Local democrats elect delegates

One hundred twenty Cohasset Democrats met in caucus on Saturday, Feb. 2 to elect five delegates and five alternate delegates to the 2002 Massachusetts Democratic Convention, to be convened on Friday, May 31 and Saturday, June 1 at the Worcester Centrum in Worcester. After very close ballots, Donna McGee, Ron Goodwin, Laurel Collins, Gail Collins and Coleman Nee were elected as delegates. Congratulations also go to the elected alternates: Margey Charles, Pat Laugelle, Ed Mulvey, Ken Ingber and Frank Pozniak.

Agnes McCann, chairman of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee, was elated by the amount of enthusiasm and commitment shown by all in attendance. She is also very encouraged at the number of first time participants contributing to the largest turnout of any Cohasset Democratic caucus in memory.

"We have a very active Town Committee," McCann said, "and I hope that this experience will motivate interested Democrats to join us." She also thanked the many volunteers who assisted in making the day a success.

More legal action over Greenbush

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

While plans for Greenbush restoration appear to be moving on a fast track, efforts to stop the train are also picking up speed, despite a recent judge's ruling that some see as a major setback.

In fact, yet another lawsuit is imminent involving property transferred to the MBTA in Scituate and Cohasset, according to a spokesperson for Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA).

At the same time, a contract for the project was recently awarded to the lowest qualified bidder — Jay Cashman construction team and partner British construction firm Balfour Beatty — for the $434 million, 17-1/2-mile project.

Although AfTA – an opposition group which recently filed a lawsuit to stop the construction contract – was dealt a blow by Plymouth County Superior Court Judge Raymond Brassard, it isn't about to give up the fight.

The ruling, released Feb. 13, states that the Greenbush branch of the Old Colony Railroad slated to run from Scituate to Braintree, including through the heart of downtown Hingham, doesn't pose enough of a threat for a preliminary injunction to be issued to stop the project.

John Bewick, a former state secretary of environmental affairs and leader of AfTA, although disappointed by the ruling, vows to continue opposing the project.

The "threats," he says are very real, including noise, property value, pollution, environmental, endangered species, cost and safety issues as well as negative impacts on the 22 historic districts on the South Shore that would be affected by rail restoration.

Jon Carlisle, spokesperson for the Secretary of Transportation, noted this isn't the first time the courts have ruled in the project's favor.

"Time and time again, they've sided with us, because I think we've laid out our justification for the Greenbush line very thoroughly and in a detailed fashion," he said. "I think any further legal efforts to thwart the project will be greeted with the same results."

With relation to the lawsuit to stop the construction contract, Carlisle further noted, "an independent judge saw our side of the argument and said we did all the necessary environmental permitting required and gave the awarding of the construction contract the green light."

At the "end of the day," though, "We'd prefer these discussions to take place across bargaining tables, and not in the courts," Carlisle said. "This line will be built, but we've taken extraordinary steps to minimize its effects and have held extensive mitigation talks with communities above and beyond what we're required to do to make the line – which is opposed by some – easier to build."

Still, Bewick points out a number of other areas of potential litigation, including issues related to the process by which Cohasset and Scituate transferred land to the MBTA for rail use without a required two-thirds majority vote in the legislature because the rail bed is considered parkland.

"We're engaged in a strange battle of wills with Cohasset over release of information regarding that transfer. The town claims it's privileged information, but what does Cohasset have to hide?" Bewick said. "It's a critical issue, because it involves 8.1 miles of the right of way in both towns that's used as walking paths."

Bewick said AfTA plans to file another suit shortly regarding that issue.

In a letter hand-delivered to members of the MBTA board and general manager, AfTA vows it "will not back away from pressing the important issues that still remain for decision by state, local and federal agencies" relative to Greenbush.

The letter further states that AfTA stands ready to challenge in court "any attempt to short-circuit the federal environmental review process . . . particularly when the MBTA's own state Environmental Impact Report concedes the project will cause severe impacts to the human environment and historic resources."

Other lawsuits could revolve around issues related to endangered species, wetlands and a permit issued by the Army Corps of Engineers for the project.

Hingham resident David Clinton wishes the lawsuits would stop.

"I'm thrilled the judge threw out that frivolous lawsuit. We've been working on restoring Greenbush since 1984, and the cost has risen from $120 million to more than $400 million because of the delaying tactics of the anti-train people," he said. "I think the judge did the right thing. It's time to get on with building the railroad. Hingham got its way with the tunnel, and there's no reason someone from Hingham should delay this project any longer."

If the lawsuits continue, he said, the project's cost could soar even further.

"Let's hope the same thing happens with the other lawsuits," Clinton said. "I can't wait for the first spade of dirt to be turned."

Bewick and other members of AfTA, though, strongly believe what they're doing is the right thing.

In fact, in addition to other concerns, AfTA also questions the environmental process revolving around Greenbush restoration and says the project is fiscally irresponsible.

Bewick and other members of the group – unlike some residents who remain staunchly opposed to Greenbush but are beginning to feel like it's a "done deal" whether they like it or not – firmly believe their opposition efforts could eventually prove fruitful.

While AfTA is sometimes accused of trying to stall the process, there's more to their actions than that, members say.

"Quite to the contrary, we intend to win," Bewick said. "Our motto is to never surrender."

Bewick's wife, Martha, said the MBTA study of alternatives to rail restoration is "fundamentally flawed."

"Our efforts are not frivolous," she said. "The project is too expensive and will wreak terrible damage on residences and businesses on the South Shore. Greenbush will create construction jobs in the area, but at what price to businesses that will go under or be hugely affected during the construction period?"

John Bewick predicts that despite the MBTA's denials, Greenbush restoration will cause a return to "blight" along the tracks.

Many residents poured large sums of money into restoring previously run-down properties following the demise of rail service in the 1950s.

"It's inevitable with all the noise and vibrations that will be heard and felt in houses that are literally 7 to 10 feet from the tracks," he said. "They'll be no market for selling those properties."

His wife recalls a comment made by an expert that one house located particularly close to the track will be "driftwood" when the train whizzes past the structure going 30 m.p.h.

"Eldridge Court will be completely cut off from the rest of the town," she further notes. "Even as the MBTA claims construction won't begin until all the necessary permits are issued, I'm wondering, When does the destruction start?"

The price tag of $434 million is too high to attract 1,700 peak riders, said John Bewick. "That's $257,000 per new peak-hour commuter. That's three times as much per rider as the MBTA has ever spent on any project."

The tragedy, he says, is that the state could save $300 million and attract more passengers by nixing Greenbush and providing express buses, expanding parking facilities at existing Red Line train stations and enhancing the MBTA transportation system already in place.

Besides, the Bewicks and others expect the cost of the project to continue to escalate as time goes on.

"There will be a lot of cost overruns, because the MBTA doesn't yet have the permits to identify important specifications and will have to redesign the plans contingent on conditions set forth in the permits," he said.

From knowledge gained from his past experience as a former secretary of environmental affairs, Bewick says the MBTA "grossly distorted the alternatives to rail restoration it was required to study and designed them to fail."

Greenbush design work could begin as early as March and tree clearing and survey work this spring.

If all goes as planned, commuter trains could start rolling by 2005, more than four decades after the former Old Colony line – which also cut through Hingham – stopped running.

World-class sailor at benefit lecture

Mark your calendar for 7 p.m., Saturday March the 16. The Cohasset Yacht Club will continue its support of maritime studies at the high school once again by organizing a winter lecture. And this year's speaker will be Cam Lewis, fresh back from his latest escapades on TeamAdventure the 110-foot catamaran built to compete in The Race, the no-holds-barred round-the-world race sailed in early 2001.

The lecture is open to the public. Cost is $15 per person (students free but please make a reservation). Payment required in advance Refreshments will be served Space is limited, so please make your reservation early by calling Meg Bertolami at (781) 383-2968. The lecture will take place at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

One of the world's best-known and respected personalities in competitive sailing, Lewis raced aboard the maxi-catamaran Commodore Explorer in 1993 when it won the first Trophée Jules Verne for the world's fastest circumnavigation. It earned him the Rolex Yachtsman of the Year award. Lewis holds the westbound Transatlantic record with Laurent Bourgnon on Primagaz and has won numerous world championships and other titles including the America's Cup in 1988 aboard Dennis Conner's Stars & Stripes. To learn more about Lewis and the TeamAdventure campaign, fire up your computer, and surf over to www.teamadventure.org.

The proceeds of the winter lecture will be used to enable students in the maritime studies program to attend a summer cruise on the schooner Ernestina. Launched as the Grand Banks schooner Effie M. Morrissey in Essex in 1894, and renamed Ernestina in 1946, she measures 112 feet overall and has a sail area of 8,323 feet. Ernestina provides offers multi-disciplinary, hands-on educational programs tailored to meet the specific needs of schools, colleges and other educational and cultural organizations. Students in Cohasset's maritime studies program spent three days on Ernestina last summer, and your support would be utilized to provide scholarships to continue this program.

To learn more about Ernestina, visit www.ernestina.org. If you follow the links through "Calendar" to "August 2001", on the 18th to 20th, you will find descriptions and photographs of the voyage experienced by the CHS group that sailed her last summer.

IT'S HAPPENING

Brudnoy is speaker

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce announces the appearance of David Brudnoy, WBZ Radio Talk Show Host, at the annual meeting. The meeting, "Building Relationships in 2002" is scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 28 starting at 6 p.m. at the Atlantica Restaurant.

Brudnoy will be available for discussions during the cocktail hour, dinner, and after his presentation. He is best known for his radio talk show on WBZ and will certainly present a timely topic for all in attendance.

Raffle prizes have been donated by Nantasket Beach Hotel and Siros of Hull, Atlantica, and Kimball's by the Sea of Cohasset, Adamo Day Spa of Cohasset and Grapevine Caterers Café of Cohasset. Other sponsors include Christopher Gallery and Cohasset Greenery, both of Cohasset and Executive Sedan of Hingham.

The evening's schedule is as follows: 6-6:45 p.m., cocktails and hors d'oeuvres (cash bar); 7-8 p.m. dinner (full course meal); and 8 p.m. the annual meeting will begin.

For information, call 781-383-1010.

Spring at CMI gala

Mark your calendar for Friday, March 15 at 7:30 p.m. when the Cohasset Maritime Institute (CMI) will host a "Swing Into Spring" Gala Event at the Cohasset Lighthouse Keeper's Residence. The festivities will include food and drink, live music and a silent auction to help kick-off the 2002 season.

CMI Director, Jack Buckley said this event "not only marks the start of a new season, it also marks the start of a fund-raising campaign for new and improved ways to get people on the water!"

"CMI is planning to host a fun evening for returning and new members and their guests," Buckley said. Join in the festivities and renew old friendships, make new acquaintances, and to learn what's new at CMI this season.

For more information, call Jack Buckley at 781-383-8261 or Mary Sease at 781-383-8318.

Garden Club meeting

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will meet at 9 a.m. Tuesday, Feb. 26 at the Second Congregational Church. "Four Seasons of Gardening" will be the topic. Club member Meg Moore needs no introduction as a speaker here! She is a teacher, naturalist and landscape designer. The slide presentation will show how to combine color, design and plants for year round interest in the garden. Come meet old friends with the anticipation of gardening just few months away.

Sailors put on ice

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Whatever doubts there may have been about the Cohasset High hockey team (18-0-1) being ready for prime time contenders for the Div. 3 state crown were seemingly vanquished with a decisive 4-0 win on Monday over Scituate, a team also thought by many close observers to be legitimate players in the Div. 3 post-season picture.

"We knew Cohasset was good, but I don't think our guys were prepared for them to be this good," said clearly impressed Scituate coach Mike Breen. "They just come at you with those three lines, and they can all really skate. And those defensemen might be the best I've seen this year."

High praise indeed, considering Breen's Sailors have gone up twice each this season against defending Div. 1 state champ Hingham, defending Div. 3 state champ Hanover and legit Div. 2 contenders Duxbury, Quincy and Marshfield.

The five Cohasset defensemen to whom the second year Scituate coach referred were Tim Straughn, Eric Libby, Mike Colorio, Mike Devine and Will Moody. This quintet of blueliners had as much to do with the 57-14 shot advantage for the game as any other players on the ice, as they not only nearly completely neutralized high flying Scituate forwards such as Steve McDevitt, Matt Hall and Kyle Simpson, but also did a phenomenal job of moving the puck up ice quickly to send away their forwards for one odd-man break after another.

A two-on-one break led to the only goal the Skippers would need on the night 5:30 in to the game. South Shore League leading scorer Greg O'Connell picked up a loose puck in Cohasset's end after one of his defensemen had poked it free, and

Boys look to put tough luck season behind them

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Tough seasons are difficult to forget, but that is exactly what the boys basketball Skippers must do if they are to rise back into the playoff picture in 2003.

"We have a lot of work to do," reported eleventh year coach and brand new father, Ron Ford. "It is one thing to have all the pieces, but it is another to go out and do it."

Cohasset thought they had all the pieces to scrape together 10 wins and put in a showing at this year's Div. 4 tournament, but injuries became this team's primary undoing.

Obviously, a school of Cohasset's size never has the manpower to field a deep bench. Thus, even one key injury can cost them a season. In this case, they had five.

Senior Nick Bolster performed extremely well in a sixth man role last year. A terrific athlete, he may well have led the Skippers in rebounding and possibly in points in the paint this season. However, the surgery he had on his detached retina kept him out of the entire football season, and all 20 basketball games.

Senior Liam Martin exploded onto the varsity scene last year, averaging just under 10 points a game off the bench. He seemed to provide a much needed spark to the offense whenever the Skippers faltered last season.

But, like Bolster, Martin was sidelined from the football Skippers SSL Championship campaign, and missed the first 15 games of the season. Martin showed his toughness, recovering as much as he could (Ford called it "close to 80 percent") to receive a standing ovation in his return game against Harwich. Martin finally got a chance to show the Skippers fans what they had been missing out on this year when he torched Hull on Senior Night for 27 points, the highest total for any Skipper this year.

"He was the scoring that we needed," noted Ford, who saw his team average below 50 points in SSL play this year, after predicting pre-season they would need to score 60-plus per game to stay competitive.

All-star senior captain Matt Bilodeau added to this list of injured quality seniors when it was revealed he had played the bulk of the season

So close and yet...

Baroudi near miss, Littauer injury casts pall on state championships

by Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset wrestling team headed in to this past weekend's Div. 3 state championships with two legitimate strong contenders for advancement to the All-State meet: senior Dan Littauer and junior Terry Baroudi.

Littauer, wrestling in the 152-pound division, broke his hand in a third round match he wound up losing, 7-4, ending his high school wrestling career.

Baroudi lasted to the semifinals, where he lost a heartbreaker to the eventual champion in the 135 pound class, Carver's Duncan Banks, 3-1. He wound up losing another gut wrencher in the consolation match afterwards, 4-3, knocking him down to fifth place. Unfortunately, only four wrestlers from each weight division qualify for All-States.

Thus, unless one of the four wrestlers who finished ahead of Baroudi drop out of All-States, Saturday marked the end of a watershed season for Cohasset wrestling.

Back in late December, with this Cohasset team turning in a sub-par showing at the annual Marshfield tournament and holding a 3-8 record at the time, one of the very last things on longtime coach Torin Sweeney's mind was a Pilgrim Conference championship.

Indeed, he seemed as surprised as anyone when his young and largely inexperienced squad actually pulled it off, finishing the 6-0 season in league competition with a 39-32 upset win over perennial powerhouse Rockland on Feb. 2.

This prepared Sweeney to be one of the few close observers who wasn't completely stunned a week later when his charges pulled off an even more improbable feat by taking fourth place in a strong 20 team field at the Div. 3 South Sectionals, advancing eight wrestlers to this past weekend's state Div. 3 meet in the process.

Dan and Terry were joined on the state championship mats this past weekend at Taconic High School (Pittsfield) by freshman brothers Jonathan Littauer (103 pounds) and Matt Baroudi (189), along with fellow teammates Joe Kehoe (112) Chris McKenna (145), Matt Casey (171) and Phil Strazzulla (125).

Of these eight Div. 3 finalists, Sweeney will lose only one to graduation: Dan Littauer. Terry Baroudi,

Quartet of three year standouts will lead girls squad in '02-'03

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

A 6-14 season would not be considered remarkable by many. However, for the Lady Skippers program, it's definitely a step in the right direction.

Flash to two years ago: A quartet of freshmen teamed up with a junior to try and resurrect a girls hoop team at Cohasset. They finished the year with a 10-8 record as a junior varsity team.

The next year, the frosh became sophomores, and the underclassmen had some real competitive experience. Coach Ellen Carr felt her team was ready to take the plunge and become a varsity team.

Just like any other new club, the team took its lumps, collecting only one win (a come-from-behind thriller over Mashpee) the entire season.

This year, four juniors led their team out of the South Shore League basement en route to six wins and a bright outlook not only for next year, but for the future of the Cohasset girls basketball program.

"I refuse to think that this team is not heading in the right direction," offered the smiling Carr, who predicted pre-season that six wins was a good and attainable target. "Next year, we are going for 10 wins, to try to make it into the tournament."

As seniors next year, Lindsay Grossman, Heather Peraino, Maura O'Brien, and LaRaine Langford will have a very good shot of hauling the Lady Skippers into the Div. 4 playoffs.

Grossman has led Cohasset in scoring in each of the past two seasons with exceptional sharpshooting from both long range and inside. O'Brien continued to show great signs under the boards this year, collecting over 10 points a game, many on putbacks.

STANDOUTS, PAGE 12

Cohasset's Maura O'Brien (#54) averaged 10 points per game this season, and should emerge as even more of an inside force next season.

Peraino and Langford should prove a formidable tandem in the backcourt next season. Injuries and sickness kept these two from really getting on track this past season, but next year should be very different.

That's not to say these four will have to make a stretch run all by themselves. They will receive the support they need for a post-season march from several talented sophomores, freshman, and possibly even a few current Middle Schoolers.

Sophomore guards Jen Buckley and Gill Weber add speed and ball control to the backcourt, something the Lady Skippers will need as their press break was one of the team's weaknesses this year.

The sophomores in the front-court are Danielle Pinkus and Ashley Faber, both of whom made great strides improving their strength this season under the boards. Freshman center Casey Anderson led the Junior Varsity squad to an 11-7 record, recording more than a few double-doubles.

The team will unfortunately be without their three senior veterans, Kerry Long, Liza Parker and Jessica Stevermer. The three contributed on and off the court as the leaders of this team, coming up with many clutch defensive stands off the bench.

The seniors said goodbye to Cohasset basketball on a high note when the Lady Skippers took down bitter rivals Hull in the season finale last Wednesday, 52-48. This marked the second time this year that Cohasset had taken down Hull by fewer than five points, as they topped the Lady Pirates at home in go-round number one on a buzzer-beating Maura O'Brien field goal.

Those two wins may have been the season highlight in many of the players' eyes. For others, it was the 12-point win the Lady Skippers had over Patriot League foes Scituate.

With nothing but the Basketball Banquet between this team and Spring sports, the Lady Skippers will be looking forward to 2003. It may very well be the year that a Cohasset girls basketball program goes past the regular season.

"Everyone is going to be stronger next year," reported Peraino, who spent much of this season nursing a broken finger. "We feel that next year is going to be our year."

Danielle Pinkus (#24) will be counted on again for hard-nosed defense in the paint in 2002-'03.

Scituate skaters prove no match for powerhouse Cohasset quickly sent linemate Rob Carpenter up the right boards with a perfect lead pass. Carpenter flew over the blue line and unleashed a slapper from the right circle that Scituate goalie Joe Duggan was able to get a pad on, but not quite enough of it, as the puck trickled across the goal line.

Cohasset captains Chris Caron and Pete Whoriskey teamed to double their team's pleasure (and lead) less than three minutes later. A Whoriskey slapper through a screen deflected right to Caron, camped in the right slot, who tucked it home behind Duggan while the goaltender was still searching for the puck. Mike Rasmussen was credited with the other assist.

The rout was officially on 5:12 to go before the first break when John Durkin's 25-foot slapper from straight out deflected off at least one body in front and beat Duggan low glove side. Straughn was the real hero on this tally, as his scintillating end-to-end rush ended when three Sailors were forced to descend on him 15-feet from the goal mouth, giving Durkin all kinds of time to wind up after taking the drop pass. O'Connell fed to Straughn in Cohasset's end to pick up perhaps the easiest of his SSL best 56 points on the season (24 goals, 32 assists).

The Skippers dropped into more of a defensive posture after this goal. Still, they created by far the better opportunities over the remaining two periods-plus, and it was only sterling play of Duggan in net that stopped this one from becoming a true laugher.

Conversely, of the 14 shots on Cohasset goalie Dan Kinchla, only a handful were quality attempts, making the senior's eighth shutout of the season a relatively carefree affair.

The scoring drought finally ended after 32:33 of playing time when Matt Davis skated out from the right corner after some nice work along the boards by Whoriskey and Tom Anderson to beat Duggan short side with 2:39 showing on the game clock.

"Our kids were really up for this game and that showed in the opening minutes," said Dennis Walsh, who is in his 30th and final season as Cohasset's head coach. "I think the edge we have over most teams is our skating. I was really impressed with how we moved the puck tonight against another good skating team like Scituate. This was a good stepping stone for us heading in to the tourney."

Hockey notes

On tap

Yesterday's scheduled game with Avon-Holbrook (9-6-2) is all that stood in the way of the first ever unbeaten season for Cohasset hockey. Walsh seemed more concerned with getting in another good tune-up before the state tourney gets underway.

He has also scheduled a scrimmage for Friday with Div. 2 tourney bound Marshfield (14-5-2).

Tourney seedings and brackets are expected to be released by the MIAA on Sunday.

Balancing act

Perhaps the most exciting element to Walsh of his team's play of late has been the increased offensive balance.

Through much of the early part of the season, the line of Carpenter-O'Connell-Durkin provided the lion's share of the scoring. In recent games, however, the second line of Davis-Whoriskey-Anderson and even the "checking line" of Rasmussen-Caron-Dave Bouchard has been picking it up at the offensive end.

"Teams with offensive balance usually do well in the tourney," said Walsh, "and we're starting to get some good things at the offensive end from different people. That's been real encouraging lately."

Mutual admiration society

"If we don't win it all, I really hope Cohasset does," said Scituate coach Mike Breen. "Dennis Walsh and (assistant coaches) Benji Walsh and Peter Sandblom have done a great job with those kids. They run a class organization. Those kids play with a lot of class. It's a real easy team to root for."

Cohasset 6, Trinity Catholic 0

O'Connell had two goals and three assists in this non-league win last Wednesday. Durkin also scored twice, while Straughn and Carpenter added solo tallies.

No, this is not a misprint.

Cohasset has now outscored its opponents 137-19 this season.

Six Skippers named All-Stars

To no surprise, Cohasset players dominated the 15-man South Shore League All-Star roster, with forwards O'Connell, Davis and Durkin, defensemen Libby and Straughn and with a broken ankle. According to Ford, he suffered the fracture during the Holiday Classic back in December, but had played through the pain.

Although he led the Skippers in assists as a veteran point guard, he had to miss the final few games of the season, including the All-Star game last Friday in Norwell.

Bilodeau's sophomore brother Chris missed the first four games of the year with a broken pinky, yet another football injury. Since it almost always takes a few weeks to get back into a rhythm with the team, he only recently started scoring the points the Skippers knew he was capable of.

"Chris is starting to come of age," smiled Ford. "He took a huge step this year."

Sophomore center Sean Connolly rounded out the list of the five injured potential starters when he missed six games with an ankle fracture. Desperately needing more height in the paint, the absence of the 6-foot-3 pivot man was clearly felt during the Skippers early season losing streak.

"Every time he got something going, he was hurt or sick," said the coach, who will look forward to having a healthy Connolly and Chris Bilodeau in the line-up next year.

One of the bright spots on the team this year was the emergence of senior captain Pete Maitland as not only a legitimate varsity player, but as a scorer, rebounder and passer. Maitland made the unprecedented jump from JV swing player his junior year to South Shore League All-Star as a senior.

Voted "Senior Class Athlete" this past Homecoming, Maitland has also been named a soccer SSL All-Star, and became the first Cohasset trackster in decades to go to the New England championships.

Maitland, Bilodeau, and Martin will be sorely missed by the Skippers for their leadership of a young, inexperienced squad this year.

They leave behind a team that Ford truly believes will make it to .500 next year and make a run at some South Sectional hardware. Bilodeau and Connolly will likely be starters, as will versatile junior Ian Kidder, who played very well as a center, forward and guard this season.

Junior Ben Lynner has been Cohasset's number one presence in the paint, and may very well break out of his 10-points-a-game frame as a senior. Juniors Jared Krupczak, Scott Faber and Ross Lieb-Lappen all gained varsity experience this year, and will be looked to for support next season.

If the Skippers do have a shot at making the tourney any time soon, next year would be the year to do it. Norton will be leaving to go to the Tri-Valley League.

Norwell will likely again be the team to beat in the SSL, but Carver will be graduating their SSL All-Star and team leading scorer Raph Frazier, and Abington will lose all three of their big guns, all All-Stars as well.

As Ford put it after Norwell beat Cohasset for the second time: "When you're facing adversity, you can get better, or you can get bitter."

COASTAL STARS REPORT

This weeks Coastal Stars game of the week article will have a different tone to it than many of the previous game of the week columns. Because many of the Coastal Stars teams have losing records the theme of most articles have dwelt on overcoming obstacles, applauding good sportsmanship, and celebrating occasional victories. Good teamwork and individual play have also been honored. But this week's article will be a pure unabashed glorification of victory as the winningest team in all of the Coastal stars - the Coastal Stars Mite C-1 team will be featured.

Unyielding defense, total commitment, good coaching, and selfless teamwork have been the hallmarks of this winning team. This was the winning recipe that catapulted another local team from last place to a world championship and one that may ultimately give C-1 their own championship.

This past weekend, with one game left in their twenty one game season, the Stars notched their nineteenth victory in an 8-0 blowout over a rival Duxbury C-1 team. It was a game that featured explosive offense from the top line of Jamie Faber, Patrick Cull, and Kevin Thomas as well as consistent defensive play from the entire team. The Stars head coach, Dave Denton, said that while some teams are built on speed and others finesse his team is built on defense and teamwork. In their twenty games to date the Stars have shut out their opponent ten times and only once have they allowed more than one goal. As outstanding as that statistic might appear the statistic that most impresses Coach Denton and his coaching staff of Vern Langley, Joe Redfern, and Mark Talanian is the number of players that have made all forty two sessions consisting of both games and practices. The coaches feel the strong sense of team commitment starts with the team's parents who have been both cooperative and supportive all year.

In the Duxbury win the team's commitment to defense and team play was again evident. Although this is a team that discourages individual glory there is a top line that has accounted for much of the team's scoring this year. This game would be no different as the Faber,Cull, Thomas line accounted for five of the eight goals. The big and skillful Cohasset forward Jamie Faber accounted for two goals and four assists while his standout line mate from Marshfield, Patrick Cull, popped in another two goals and three assists. Cull's neighbor and line mate, Kevin Thomas, added a goal and a couple of assists to add to his line's offensive barrage.

The other goals were scored by second line power house Austin Hale on a powerful wrist shot. Ryan Talanian moved up from his position on the blue line for his score.And Vinnie Calorio stole the puck from a defender in his own zone to break in alone and blast one by the beleaguered Duxbury goalie.

The offensive damage could have been even worse if one of the Stars' top point getters, Carter Denton, had not been side lined with the flu and one the teams most formidable playmakers, Cohasset's own "Downtown" Willie Brown, had not been on one of his many family vacations to spots unknown. Also, missing from the mix was the always dangerous Robbie Mahoney whose constant hustle and tenacity has been a force all season.

Complementing the offensive outburst was a remarkable effort of team defense- a notion that comes easily to this team whose players rotate positional play from game to game including goalie. This week's goalie, Jake Redfern, an always aggressive player at whatever position he plays, was only called upon once as the Stars held Duxbury to just one shot all game. Much of the credit defensively goes to the defensive pairings of Trevor Langley/ Ryan Talanian and Tim Martin/Conor Maher. These defensive stalwarts not only allowed no goals but also refused to surrender one shot on net once the team went up 5-0. Once the team had a commanding lead Coach Denton told his players to put away the artillery and challenged his players not to allow a shot on net. Amazingly they met the challenge and held Duxbury without a shot for most of the final two periods.

No defensive gem is complete without the contribution from those unsung heroes who don't dominate the score sheet. The heroes of this game who did not make it on the score sheet were the always dependable line of Alex Hurd, Zach Monaco, and Matt Sullivan. Coach Denton said Hurd's tenacity has impressed him all year and Monacho seems to be a force in every game. Matt Sullivan, according to Coach Denton, is the team's most improved player who just gets better with every game. D.J. Evans, a star on another Star's Mite C team, was called in for reinforcement to substitute for the team's three missing players. D.J's skill and relentless hustle were a welcomed addition to Denton's second line.

Twenty and one. Ten shut outs. Three consecutive shut outs. Focus on teamwork. Emphasis on defense. Solid coaching. Supportive fan base. And a head coach who is a long time Patriot season ticket holder who just so happened to be in New Orleans for one of the greatest displays of overall team play in some time. It looks like this might be one of the few shining stars in an otherwise bleak constellation of Star teams as the regular season closes down and the playoffs are about to begin.

Casey and McKenna are juniors, Strazzula a sophomore. The younger Littauer and Baroudi, along with Kehoe and injured 135-pound standout Mike Casey (Matt's kid brother) headline one of the best freshmen classes Sweeney says he has ever had in his 19 year coaching career.

Of the 24 wrestlers on the roster, only three are being lost to graduation. Vinnie Gratta and John Hussey are the two who will join Littauer in the caps and gowns this spring.

"The most exciting thing to me about all of this is that I know Cohasset wrestling is headed back to where it should be," said Sweeney, who directed the Skippers to a Sectional championship and state Div. 3 runner-up in 1999. "We've got a lot of talented young kids who are extremely committed, and there's just an excitement about the program we hadn't seen in the last few years."

As for this weekend's happenings, if nothing else, it seems Terry Baroudi has caught the wrestling fever bad.

Unlike most top wrestlers, Terry has not been a full-time devotee. He has played baseball in the spring and football in the fall for C.H.S.. After this weekend's near misses, he sounds ready to eschew those other activities and commit year round to grappling.

"I want to be a state champion, and I'm going to do everything I can to get ready for next season," said the 16-year old matter-of-factly. "I wasn't that far away this time around. I came so close and I know I can do better."

Terry literally came within inches of moving on to the finals Saturday, a five-point reversal and takedown in the 3-1 semifinal loss being waved off because he rolled out of bounds with eventual champion Duncan Banks.

The ensuing consolation match to Foxboro's Brian Dietzel was tied 2-2 entering the third period. Inside the final minute, Dietzel scored two points with a high crotch move. Baroudi reversed this with a nice move in the waning seconds to tie things up again...or so he thought. The ref first held up two fingers, indicating a two-point move, but then changed it to "1", making it a 4-3 final.

Terry dominated his fifth place showdown for top alternate status, beating the top seed from the West sectional, 6-1.

To add insult to injury, Terry had twice beaten the wrestler who wound up finishing fourth to advance to All-States, Holliston's Alex Strum.

There is still a chance Terry could wind up going to All-States. He'll find out at Friday's weight in at Brockton High School if any of the four wrestlers who finished ahead of him dropped out of contention—not as rare an occurrence as some might believe.

"I'm just keeping my fingers crossed," said Terry. "Going to All-States would be a great experience, and I feel like I could do pretty well."

Perhaps the most improbable of all the improbabilities surrounding this Cohasset wrestling team was that Dan Littauer was even here. When the senior suffered a badly dislocated elbow on Dec. 5, the prognosis was a four-month healing period and the end of his high school wrestling career. He made it back to the mats in less than half that proscribed time — Feb. 2, to be exact. He made his debut in the regular season finale with a 14-2 win over his Rockland counterpart to play a pivotal role in the Skippers league title clincher. So, with a 1-0 record, Littauer — who finished second at Sectionals and fifth at States last year — headed into the Sectionals. His reputation bought him a number two seed, but he proved worthy for this respect by dominating all comers before falling to Foxboro's Mike Ragusa in the finals.

Unfortunately, Dan's elbow swelled noticeably and became quite painful over the course of the second day, and the situation only worsened in practice sessions in preparations for this past weekend. He won his first match on Friday, but the elbow shot up again, turning him essentially in to a one-armed wrestler in round two. Not surprisingly, he lost 14-4, as he was unable to pull off what for him are pretty basic moves.

"My arm was pretty useless by that point," noted Littauer. "I couldn't escape out of anything."

With the one win under his belt, Littauer was able to survive to Saturday. Overcompensatign for the left elbow injury, however, he placed a little bit too much pressure on his right hand on one move and..."snap" went the bone. Littauer continued to fight on despite the pain, but fell 7-4 in a gallant effort to enmd his day and high schol wrestling career.

"I was happy just to get the chance to wrestle again after all of the doctors told me I was through," said Littauer, who would like to try to wrestle in college providing his elbow heals completely. "To help the team win a league title and finish second at Sectionals after everything I went through feels great."

The Cohasset wrestling team.

And he looks forward to following the progress of next year's team extremely closely.

"They're going to be awesome next year," said Dan, who has been accepted at B.C. and Wheaton, and applied to eight other colleges, including Harvard. "I was a freshman with the 1999 Sectional Championship team, and I can see a lot of similarities between that team we had in 1999 and the one that's going to be coming back next year."

Wrestling Notes

10-year Cohasset assistant coach Peter Buckley was named Div. 3 Assistant Coach of the Year by a vote of the Div. 3 coaches.

"I was really happy for Coach Buckley; he really deserved this," said Dan Littauer, who first met Buckley when he was giving instructional wrestling lessons to grade schoolers at the Cohasset Community Center eight years ago. "He's been out there working with kids, and loving it for so long. He does a great job."

Cohasset High will reportedly be getting a true wrestling room before next year, with permanent mats on the walls as well as floor.

Up until this season, the wrestlers shared the upstairs gym with the gymnastics squad. However, that gym was converted in to a library for this school year, which left the wrestling squad competing for gym time with both basketball teams—a situation Sweeney said proved costly to his team's development, particularly in the early part of the season.

"It's amazing these guys did as well as they did with the limited practice time they had this year," said Littauer. "There's no telling how far they might go with their own room next year."

possible," Haddad said about the makeup of the search committee. "Some were town managers, some were police chiefs and some were citizens, they all worked together to make a great recommendation."

He added that the appointment of Jackson was the "obvious choice".

Police union president Bill Quigley said he thinks Jackson is an excellent choice. He said the department was looking for a good chief, and they got one.

"I think the choice sent a clear message to the department that if you're clear headed and hard working you can rise to the top," Quigley said. "I think Jackson is a good fit for the town and the police department."

Jackson will be replacing Chief Brian Noonan who has served the town for 28 years. Noonan has known Jackson since the 1960s and has become closer with him since Jackson joined the force in 1979.

"I'm extremely happy for him," Noonan said. "He's worked extremely hard and I think it's a natural progression for him."

Noonan thought Jackson's strong military background (he has 30 years of service in the US Navy reserves) will serve him well in his new post and said he advised Jackson to keep a level head and realize the broad scope of the job.

"You have to be concerned with all the departments, not just the police department," he said.

Noonan added leaving the job after more than two decades (nearly 10 years as chief) is going to be difficult. He said he has no immediate plans and will take a few month to relax. He did offer some sage advice to his successor.

"I told him to keep your friends close and your enemies closer," Noonan said.

Jackson said his first order of business will be acclimating himself to the office. He wants to establish new middle management to take the position that he vacated as well as updating departmental rules, policies and procedures.

One of the programs he wants to install is related to youth alcohol offenses. Jackson said he would like to model the program after the one used by the Wellesley police that uses a summons process in which a first-time offender isn't necessarily arrested.

"I'd like to develop some consistency in dealing with the youth," Jackson said. He added that he hopes to secure funding for a full-time school resource officer which would enable the police department to be more visible in the schools.

Other issues Jackson would like to address includes installing remote communication terminals in the cruisers as well as establishing a back-up communications system for the police headquarters. And of course, later down the line, Jackson would love a new police station.

"The station we have now is just not adequate for our needs," he said.

Jackson, who lives on Ash Street, holds a bachelor of arts in political science from the University of Virginia, a bachelor of science in law enforcement from Northeastern University, graduated from the Brockton Police Academy in 1980 and completed a command training program at Babson College last year.

Haddad looks to bigger town

By Evan Schiff and Peter Hartzel
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Town Manager Mark Haddad has been busy in recent weeks thinking about whom to appoint in various departmental vacancies. In the span of a few months, Haddad has had to deal with the prospect of appointing a new police chief, fire chief and superintendent of the Department of Public Works.

Soon, the town may have to select someone to take his place.

Last week, Haddad was notified that he is on the short list to become Dedham's new town administrator. Joining him on the list is Norwell Town Administrator Jim Boudreau, a friend of Haddad's, and Seekonk Town Administrator William Keegan.

Haddad, who is under contract with Cohasset until June of 2005, applied for the position in January and expects to hear if he got the job in the next couple weeks.

"Every once in a while an opportunity presents itself that bears looking into," Haddad said. "This just seems like a natural progression for me."

Dedham's population of 23,000 is roughly triple the size of Cohasset and its operating budget of $54 million is more than double Cohasset's. Haddad said the lure of a bigger town is a compelling reason to take the job.

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said everyone understands that this is a business and while he doesn't want to see Haddad leave, he'd understand.

"He's done an excellent job in his five years here," Koed said. "If he does leave I wish him the best of luck and if he doesn't, I'm glad to have him back."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said Haddad, who was a finalist two years ago for the town manager position in Sudbury, has done a great job serving as Cohasset's first town manager.

"He's had to deal with a tremendous amount of issues," McMorris said. "We'll definitely miss him if he leaves."

Dedham's Board of Selectmen, which will choose the new administrator, will interview all three of the candidates in consecutive hour-long sessions on Feb. 28 from 6-9 p.m. A vote to select a new candidate is expected in early March.

"They were all very impressive candidates," Dedham's search committee chairman Frank Sally said. "I think there will probably be some difficulty in choosing one of the three."

The search committee interviewed 10 of the 34 applicants. At selectmen's request, Dedham police are now conducting background checks on the finalists. Following next Monday's interviews, Dedham's Selectmen ChairmanTom Polito said selectmen will visit the towns where the finalists work to see what people there think about them. Polito said selectmen have not yet decided whether to also hold a second round of interviews before voting to select the new administrator.

In the meantime, Dedham selectmen have asked each of the finalists to provide them with copies of the fiscal 2003 budget proposal for the town they now work for, the town charter, current annual report and annual report from the year before they arrived, and a writing sample.

Plaza plan makes a comeback

the plaza. The Planning Board did not support the article.

So if past history is a gauge, then the atmosphere might not have been as friendly at last night's Planning Board public hearing that took place after the Mariner went to press. Staszko was scheduled to meet before the board at 9 p.m. (Wednesday, Feb. 20).

Planning Board member Bob Sturdy told selectmen last week, the board does not support expanding highway business zoning on 3A.

"We don't want to expand the commercial district on 3A because it takes away the viability of the downtown area," Sturdy said.

But Selectman Ronnie McMorris said an expanded shopping center on 3A would have little or no impact on the village.

"I think it's a shame Donald (Staszko) has to come back every year for this," she said. "I think it's a good idea."

Sturdy also said the Planning Board has asked Town Counsel whether Staszko can bring this article forward. If an article is voted down at Town Meeting, it has to wait two years before it is back on the warrant, he said.

Staszko built Stop & Shop in 1986, and the other building, which houses Dunkin' Donuts, Blockbuster Video, the Shoe Market and several other stores in 1988.

He plans to extend the highway business zone 200 feet to the rear of the plaza to construct a 32,500 square foot building that would house a large, dry goods retailer, and expand Super Stop & Shop by some 17,500 square feet.

In a telephone interview, Staszko said he has been encouraged by "residents and a lot of public officials" to bring the issue forward again this year.

"They are saying, 'we need the revenue,'" he said. "A lot of people cannot afford to live here any longer – and the only way they can stay is to take some of the tax burden off the homeowner."

Currently, the existing plaza brings in about $119,000 in annual tax revenue. By the time the expansion is built, that number would be closer to $130,000, plus the additional $100,000 from the new section, for a total of about $230,000, Staszko said.

"That's a $6.8 million revenue stream over 20 years," he said.

Staszko also said a new retailer would actually help the village.

"It would help bring people into town, who might want to go to the village to see what a quaint community is like," he said.

Selectmen took the issue under advisement because the Water Commission also has an article concerning the water resource district on the Town Meeting warrant. Selectmen want to consult with town counsel to make sure the two articles don't conflict.

Editor Mary Ford contributed to this report.

see the book used in the upper grades as part of a mini-course on town history," she said. "The book kind of lends itself to that type of use."

But the history and social science curriculum framework for the high school concentrates on broader issues, such as the intellectual history of the United States from its founding to the present or, the growth and decline of centers of political power in world history from the 1400s to the present.

While Fennessey recognizes the importance learning American and world history, she wishes the state would allow more time for teachers to concentrate on local issues.

"The teachers don't have an opportunity to include what they want in the curriculum," she said. "The MCAS has everyone directed in one path."

Last year was the first year 10th-graders were required to pass the MCAS test in order to graduate. The test grades students in several sections, ranging from English/Language Arts to math and social studies.

Both Fennessey and Dormitzer said they were going to continue to work together to explore possibilities for incorporating the book into the school curriculum. Dormitzer hopes the book will be featured on the future town Web site for easy access to its contents.

Janelle Malafronte

Debut CD brings singing lawyer 'Center Stage'

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

After releasing a successful dance single while in still in law school, the demanding roles of becoming a real estate attorney, a wife and the mother of two put the singing career of Braintree attorney Janelle Malafronte on hold.

But only temporarily.

Janelle has just completed her debut CD single entitled "Center Stage," a pop/contemporary dance tune.

The CD has garnered some "very positive feedback" from local music business professionals, as well as local Boston radio personalities.

"After all these years of putting my dream on hold, it really feels like things have happened so quickly. It's all coming together. It's serendipity," Malafronte said.

On New year's Eve, Janelle had the good fortune to talk to DJ Michael Knight, who plays top 40 pop on STAR 93.7 FM. Knight agreed to listen to "Center Stage." Janelle was thrilled to receive an enthusiastic e-mail from Knight, saying he was forwarding the demo CD to the station's music director for evaluation.

After all these years of putting my dream on hold, it really feels like things have happened so quickly. It's all coming together. It's serendipity,"
Janelle Malafronte

"You've got a great voice. Sounds like you had a lot of fun recording it," Knight said in the message.

Janelle, who grew up in Plymouth and graduated from Plymouth-Carver High School in 1983, is no newcomer to the stage. She began singing professionally at the age of 19, when she was recruited by the Plymouth band "After Dark." This was a very busy time for Janelle, who was then attending Suffolk University, where she was a Fulham Merit Scholar for four years. She sang with this band even after she entered Suffolk Law School, then joined the 60s band "Easy Living."

Janelle celebrated graduating from law school by releasing the dance single "Don't Be Shy," which had air time on KISS 108 and won Battle of the Bands. This was also the start of the hiatus in her singing career.

"I was getting married and passing the bar exam. I never had the chance to go to the next level," Janelle said.

The next level followed Janelle, however.

During a trip to DisneyWorld with her husband, Tom Snarsky, Janelle, who conducts her law and singing careers under her maiden name of Malafronte, received a call from "Star Search" for a return performance that cut the Snarskys' vacation two days short. Tom, an accountant, took it in stride.

"Tom is a wonderful guy, very supportive," Janelle said.

In the years that followed, Janelle concentrated on her family and her real estate law practice

She still went on singing, however, just on a different stage. The couple have two children, Tommy, age 8, who goes to Ross Elementary School in Braintree, and daughter Kaylene, 5, who attends a private kindergarten. Janelle is very active with the Ross School PTO and involved with Kaylene's class. She won kudos for singing "Proud to be An American" with the kindergartners.

Professionally, Janelle sings with Trax, a South Shore top 40s band based at Bert's on Plymouth beach. The group also appears at Joe's American Bar and Grill in Hanover. Trax can be contacted by e-mail at nightlifemusicco@netzero.net. There are about 5,000 fans signed up to receive Trax's e-mail newsletter. Janelle can be contacted directly at janellemarie47@hotmail.com.

Janelle is also working on a 10-song CD with her producer, Tony Bailey.

Many may wonder where Janelle finds the time to pursue her singing career.

"I'm an Aries. I've always been very involved," she said simply.

"Center Stage" was written for Janelle by Bailey. Once Janelle began recording, however, the song became a joint project.

"He wrote it for me. Then it became a collaboration. We co-wrote and co-produced it," Janelle said.

Now comes the quest for air time.

"Once you create a product, you have to get people to support it, you have to get people to play it, and, hopefully, a record company picks up on it and then you can go on making music," Janelle said.

Last December, serendipity was again in motion. Janelle, on vacation in Duxbury artist making watercolor work his full-time job

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The world of the visual arts has always seen its share of late-bloomers — those who chose its various craft as a second career or sideline interest.

Duxbury artist Jack Haran is one individual who seems to fit this description. Except that Haran, a part-time watercolor and oil painter and full-time computer programs manager at Commonwealth Auto-Reinsurance in Quincy, actually began painting some three decades ago, shortly after taking his first art course, and has pursued what he calls serious study of his craft for the past nine years.

"I had just a passing interest in 'art' until the mid-70s," said Haran in his personal artist's statement. "While touring the Museum of Fine Arts, Winslow Homer's 'Blue Boat' beckoned to me from across two rooms. I was instantly taken by watercolors and vowed to become a proficient painter of watercolors. I'm still working at it."

Haran, whose art experience also includes graphics and black-and-white photography, plans to retire soon from his "day job" to devote more time to his painting and other creative ventures. A preview of what is to come can be seen at Marshfield's Ventress Library, where Haran is showing his recent watercolor work through March 9.

Duxbury watercolor artist Jack Haran will show his works at the Ventress Library Gallery in Marshfield through March 9.

What's remarkable about Haran's 20 pieces in the untitled show is their penchant to go right to and draw from the classic sources, both in influences and subject matter. Many of the artist's works represent his travels over the past seven years to Ireland, Italy and France, while others are studies done closer to home in Scituate and Maine. Most of them attempt to convey the styles and techniques of Haran's most admired previous era masters, John Singer Sargeant, Winslow Homer and lesser known mid-20th century English watercolorist Edward Sego.

Among Haran's village and landscape studies done in Italy, several of them chose their setting in Tuscania, a quaint, rural village some hundred miles north of Rome. Self-descriptive scenes in this location, such as "Green Gate," "Church II" and "Town Street" seem to display the qualities of artistic muse, and the artist responds with loose, natural color renderings of his given subjects. Haran produced the latter two works while on a group tour in the town, and mentions that during the group's stay, they were treated to a party thrown for them by the town's mayor, and attended by local aristocracy, including people described as counts, countesses and such. A painting demonstration show by the group, the artist said, was among the festivities.

Other scenes around Europe include "City Wall and Statue, Rome," "Windmill at Dusk, France" and "Hillside Vineyard, Italy," a well-textured interpretation which Haran said was sketched from a Eurorail train travelling the countryside at 120 mph. Much of the same qualities of the artist's European work extend as well to his state-side subjects, such as "Gurnet Light, Scituate," "Cypress Point, California" and others.

"Art for me is an educational process," Haran said. "The discovery of the interaction of colors, the beauty of a line, feeling of deep space on a two dimensional surface none of which existed a few minutes ago is thrilling. It may not always be a great image but it provides a great deal of satisfaction."

Boston-area cabaret performers Dorothy Miller, Mary Callanan, Brian DeLorenzo and Michael Kreutz light up the dinner theater stage at Raffael's in "It's GI Jive." Kruetz directed, provided musical arrangements and accompaniment for the show which runs through Feb. 21.

Cabaret stars shine in USO tribute show

'It's GI Jive' at Raffael's

By R. Scott Reedy

Theatre review

With patriotism back in style, J.M. Productions is opening its third season of dinner theater at Raffael's in North Quincy with, "It's GI Jive," a classy tribute to USO Shows.

A quartet of respected Boston cabaret performers — Mary Callanan, Brian DeLorenzo, Michael Kreutz, and Dorothy Miller — join forces to present a lively program of some of the best-known music of World Wars I and II, with particular focus on the 1940s.

An energetic opener by the ensemble on the show's title song is followed by a solo set by Brian DeLorenzo. A smooth-voiced male vocalist, DeLorenzo dips into the Gershwin songbook for a strong "Strike Up the Band," a sweet "Our Love is Here to Stay," and a silky "Fools Rush In," a standard recorded not once, but three times by Frank Sinatra.

Dorothy Miller joins DeLorenzo on "Baby It's Cold Outside," a romantic novelty number made famous by Dinah Shore and Buddy Clark.

Alone in the spotlight, Miller proves herself to be a sophisticated chanteuse as she segues seamlessly from the uptempo dance numbers "It Don't Mean A Thing" and "Puttin' on the Ritz" to the stirring "Seems Like Old Times."

Long before Destiny's Child, the Dixie Chicks or even the Supremes, there were the Andrews Sisters. Real-life siblings Patti, Maxine, and Laverne Andrews were one of the earliest "girl groups" to achieve chart-topping success.

One sister short, Callanan and Miller enlist the help of a game Delorenzo for an homage to the Andrews that features "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree," "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy," and their first big hit, "Bei Mir Bist Du Schon."

Michael Kreutz provides the show's direction, musical arrangements, and first-rate piano accompaniment. Kreutz uses his own set to pay a musical tribute to two of America's wartime allies, France and Great Britain.

Michael Kreutz provides the show's direction, musical arrangements, and first-rate piano accompaniment. Kreutz uses his own set to pay a musical tribute to two of America's wartime allies, France and Great Britain. His paean to Edith Piaf, "La Vie En Rose," even includes a verse sung in French. For the Brits, Kreutz delivers a love letter in the form of "The White Cliffs of Dover."

The cast gets the audience into the act, too, with a sing-a-long that includes George M. Cohan's "Yankee Doodle Dandy" and Irving Berlin's "Over There."

Callanan continues with Irving Berlin, for her solos on "Count Your Blessings" and "There's No Business Like Show Business." The latter will forever be associated with Ethel Merman, of course, but Callanan gives it her own special belt right out of the Skyline Room.

A rousing, all-cast rendition of "God Bless America" is coupled with a reprise of the show's title song to close out the show.

("It's GI Jive" will be presented at Raffael's Restaurant, 1 Enterprise Drive, North Quincy, through Feb. 21. For tickets, call 617/328-1600.)

War on trial

Hart's War (B-)

If there exists an underused cliche in the war movie genre, it has eluded our attention, but not much has been left unrifled through for "Hart's War," a compendium of set-pieces of varying degrees of authenticity and acting turns that range from static to, in rare moments, gratifying believability. That the movie irritates the usual suspects among film critics (a gaggle wedded to the notion that the most noble reason to make a movie is to bemoan racial inequities) will surprise no one; that its merits are accordingly pooh-poohed is no less unexpected.

Bruce Willis gets in confrontation mode with Colin Farrell.

The sub-set here of the war movie species is the one about imprisoned GIs contending with those vile Germans but actually suffering more angst among themselves: the how-sad-is-my-stalag flick. Its hero is an innocent naif, though the critic cadre finds that inconvenient — he is white — and so the victim of nastiness, who isn't (white, that is), centers their attention.

Lt. Tommy Hart (Colin Farrell, the fine Irish actor who has strutted his stuff to great if not yet much appreciated effect in "Tigerland," also playing a Yank soldier), is captured on a routine delivery run, interrogated and likely tortured into coughing up some information, then sent to a war camp where the highest rank officer, Col. William McNamara (Bruce Willis), congealed in one pained, disgusted expression, believing that Hart did hand the Germans some key information, consigns him to an enlisted men's barracks. Some there, especially Sgt. Bedford (Cole Hauser), are racists, resenting the billeting of two black airmen among them. A murder leads one of the blacks (Terrence Howard, posited here as the Christ figure and given one nobility-peppered speech to intone), to be court martialed. Hart's assigned to defend him, the camp commandant (Marcel Iures), like Hart a Yale graduate, and transcending the standard chilling stereotype of the haughty Kraut by a nuanced performance, is amused, and we're off.

We're actually off, we learn, to a ruse, a diversion from something more important than the fate of the accused or the legal agility of the pre-war law student Hart, who is all heart. Implausible coincidences and actions tumble out so ridiculously that you feel not the gratifying "ah ha!" but a frustrated "oh get real!" You'll wonder not just how could earlier ingredients have been so effectively positioned to lead to where the film in its muddle high-mindedness has arrived, but also how the good guys fell heir to such nifty equipment. They're POWs in a hellhole yet seem to have been accoutered by the Sharper Image and the Horchow Collection.

"Hart's War" looks authentic and Farrell, Iures, Hauser and Howard carry it; Willis phones it in. "Saving Private Ryan' opened the contemporary floodgates on war films, the Oscar-neglected "Black Hawk Down" gave this genre a boost, and other war films hover. "Hart's War" is a litmus test for critics, and it'll nudge Farrell closer to his deserved recognition as one of the brighter new lights on screen. For any who are unaware of the nexus between race and the military (most Americans), it might inspire curiosity and, who knows, learning.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20

The moon enters Gemini at 3:50 a.m., setting a quick pace today and tomorrow. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 7:02 a.m., signaling the buildup to a full moon on February 27. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, prepares to form a flowing 120-degree alignment to Saturn. That means that today's influences are favorable for signing contracts, launching new enterprises. All communications get the green light; write letters, send e-mails, make phone calls.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21

Take it slow and easy this morning. Storm clouds move in between 10:31 a.m.-1:31 p.m., when the Gemini moon opposes Pluto. Think before you say or do anything you will later regret. Fortunately, this planetary influence moves out quickly, and the remainder of the day and evening rates high across the board. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22

At 2:53 a.m. the Gemini moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive until 11:16 a.m. Avoid rigid time schedules; there may be unexpected distractions or delays. Finish old business and don't start anything new until 11:16 a.m., when the moon enters the sign Cancer. Planetary action points to an above-average afternoon and evening. If you have work projects to accomplish, important decisions to make or contracts to sign, don't delay. Influences are prime for new starts across the board. In addition, the evening is great for socializing. Gather with friends and family; let the good times roll.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23

The moon travels in the sign Cancer this weekend, placing the focus on family and domestic responsibilities. Influences rate high for purchasing or selling land, property, household appliances. Give extra time and attention to children, pets. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Jupiter generates an upbeat mood, making this another great evening for partying.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 24

Conflicting planetary influences set the stage for a morning that can go either way. The Cancer moon forms a challenging 90-degree contact to combative Mars at 8:39 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Choose your words carefully. Don't rock the boat. On the other hand, an alignment of Mercury and Neptune prompts you to spend time alone. Pursue activities that help you to relax and unwind. Storm clouds move out at 2:36 p.m., when the moon enters playful Leo. The evening is prime for enjoying favorite friends, food, conversation.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 25

The next couple of days have their challenges. Stay alert and use common sense. Postpone making major decisions, purchases or acting on new ideas. A positive Leo moon is a plus today. However, it forms potentially stressful oppositions to Mercury and Neptune in the morning. In addition, a challenging Venus/Pluto alignment occurs at 7:43 p.m. Instead of taking on new responsibilities, this is a time for cleaning out. Get rid of items that are no longer useful and have become dust-collectors. Let of situations and relationships that have become too one-sided for comfort.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26

A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Saturn combined with a full moon buildup makes for stormy astrological weather. Remain calm no matter what is happening around you. You may be forced to face the facts about issues that have been troubling you and make hard decisions. The Leo moon becomes inactive at 11:30 a.m. until 2:47 p.m., when it enters Virgo. This a great evening to work or study late. You can be most productive.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 27

The full moon culminates at 4:17 a.m., 8 1/2-degrees of Virgo/Pisces. However, the moon continues to form potentially difficult aspects to planets until 10:17 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Stress management is important. Sidestep doubts, worries, fears. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. Spend extra time working out with exercise routines. Stay busy with work projects that need a finishing touch or reorganization.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28

After the barrage of planetary activity this week, today's influences offer an opportunity to catch up, relax. The Virgo moon is inactive until 1:47 p.m., when it enters Libra. Plan to finish jobs already begun, handle routine chores and errands this morning. The green light goes on for new starts at 1:47 p.m., particularly in your personal life. This is a wonderful time for meeting people, making contacts, establishing new relationships. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

Debut CD brings singing lawyer 'Center Stage'

Las Vegas, by chance was given the opportunity to sing with solo pianist David Osborne at Caesar's Palace. Osborne, known as "the pianist of the presidents," has performed for former presidents Ronald Reagan, George Bush and Jimmy Carter.

"I sang three songs with him and had the time of my life," Janelle said.

Osborne, offered to bring "Center Stage" to the attention of North Star Records, East Greenwich, RI, his recording company.

"The idea is to get it all over the map and see if you can generate some interest," Janelle said.

The momentum is picking up.

"The wheels are in motion. We're not sure where they're taking us, but it's very exciting," Janelle said.

Her husband Tom takes the impending changes in the family's lifestyle with typical good humor.

"Oh boy, it's Star Search all over again," Tom said

Award-winning plants for the landscape

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Sleet, snow and freezing rain pelt against my windowpane driven by gusty breezes on a wintry February evening. Only yesterday, springtime was in the air as robins hopped across the lawn, songbirds filled the treetops with their spirited melodies and industrious homeowners initiated their outdoor spring-cleaning projects.

Despite our current wintry conditions, hints of spring are gradually appearing to offer assurances that the beauty nestled beneath the powdery dusting of snow will soon burst forth. For an early glimpse of the springtime glory that will soon be ours to enjoy, plan a trip to the Rhode Island Spring Flower Show from February 21-24 at the Rhode Island Convention Center in Providence. Visit the show's web site at www.flowershow.com for ticket information and a schedule of lectures, demonstrations, and workshops. Roger Swain of Victory Garden fame will be just one of the notable featured speakers.

Even before gardening became a passion, I could not resist the lure of the New England Spring Flower Show in Boston. Grand gardens and displays offered the sights, smells and sounds of early spring. Every year I was drawn first to the woodland exhibits, for they reminded me of my childhood growing up in the Catskill Mountains. Wonderful wildflowers including lady slippers, trillium and Jack-in-the-pulpit brought back fond memories of a carefree time wandering through the forest. The fragrant, silky, white bottlebrush blooms of the Fothergilla particularly intrigued me. A Cary Award winner in 1997, Fothergilla major is a native to the Allegheny Mountains. Reaching a height of 8 to 10 feet these unique shrubs are ideal for the woodland garden or as a specimen plant in the perennial or shrub border. Fothergillas prefer moisture-retentive, well-drained soils, rich in organic matter, in sun or shade but will produce more abundant flowers and demonstrate their spectacular fall color to greatest advantage given more sunlight. These dense, compact shrubs produce their unique flowers in springtime prior to the appearance of their attractive oval, toothed leaves that turn vivid shades of yellow, orange and scarlet in autumn.

Many of the distinctive trees, shrubs, vines and ground covers that have been recipients of the Cary Award are sure to be on display in this year's lovely garden exhibits at our local flower shows. A mid- to late-winter bloomer, the Chinese witch hazel, Hamamelis mollis 'Pallida' is often found in show gardens, its unique clusters of fragrant, yellow-fringed blossoms appearing prior to its handsome leaves which turn bright yellow in autumn. Best grown in organic soils in open but protected sites, this vase-shaped shrub provides color when we most need it.

An unusual and underused deciduous shrub known as the Redvein Enkianthus is a superb choice for sites having filtered sunlight and moist, humus-rich soils where a mature specimen may reach a height of 12 feet. Clusters of attractive, creamy-colored bells appear in late spring, each flower striped with deep pink to red veins. The leaves are arranged in clusters atop tiered branches and become vividly tinted in autumn with red and orange.

Other Cary Award winners that would serve as suitable companion shrubs to the enkianthus include the evergreen Japanese andromeda, Pieris japonica 'Brouwer's Beauty', and Rhododendron vaseyi, also known as the pinkshell azalea. Andromedas display lovely whorls of dark green leaves year-round and dense clusters of fragrant, cascading bells in very early spring. The purplish red flower buds appear in autumn and add color and texture to the winter garden. The deciduous pinkshell azalea is native to eastern North America, its lovely rose pink flowers appearing prior to the foliage. Grow this attractive native in full sun or an open woodland environment.

Members of the holly family offer a fabulous diversity of excellent landscape shrubs and Cary Award winners include both evergreen and deciduous types. Few evergreens can rival the striking, deep blue-green foliage of Ilex meserveae 'Blue Prince' and 'Blue Princess'. As the male and female flowers are borne on separate plants, both are needed to ensure the production of the spectacular red berries that usually persist through the winter months. Hollies thrive in moist, well-drained soils in sun or partial shade and can be used as individual specimens or to form an elegant hedge. Prune in spring to maintain dense, compact shrubs.

The winterberry holly, Ilex verticillata, is a deciduous shrub, native to moist environments in eastern North America. The Cary Award winner Ilex 'Red Sprite' is a compact grower with bountiful red fruits that are ideal for holiday decorations and are favored by bluebirds and other feathered visitors in springtime. Reaching a maximum height of 4 feet, this carefree shrub is ideal for smaller landscapes.

For the late summer shady garden, few shrubs rival the sweet pepperbush (Clethra alnifolia) for its provides handsome foliage and lovely spires of pink or white. Clethra 'Ruby Spice' was selected as a 2000 recipient of the Cary Award, its shiny, deep green foliage and deep reddish-pink buds producing fragrant spikes of pink flowers when few other shrubs are in bloom. This low-maintenance, deciduous, suckering shrub prefers moist, shady sites and is a magnet for bees, butterflies and hummingbirds.

Should you have an opportunity to visit the upcoming flower shows be on the lookout for the Cary Award winners and when spring arrives, be sure to add one or more to your landscape.

Spending proposals sought for new fund

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The newly formed Community Preservation Committee has an interesting job: how to spend money.

The nine-member board, formed under the Community Preservation Act adopted by the town at the ballot box a year ago, is grappling with what spending recommendations to make to the March 30 annual Town Meeting.

The money — estimated to about $500,000 by October — comes from a 1.5 percent real estate tax surcharge and state matching funds.

The committee wants public input and plans to vote on its recommendations at its meeting 7 p.m., Monday (March 4) at Town Hall.

Under the statute, the town must spend 10 percent of the money on historic preservation, 10 percent on community housing and 10 percent on open space. The remaining 70 percent can go for any of the above including recreation.

There are currently three proposals before the committee.

• $200,000 to pay part of the cost to construct ball fields at the former gravel pits site

"We want to push things out in the public eye and avoid the situation where people don't know if the committee exists."

— Stuart Ivimey, CPC chairman

• $11,650 to pay for construction designs for handicap access for the Cohasset Historical Society's two Elm Street museums, the Maritime Museum and Capt. John Wilson House, and reconstruction specifications for water diversion and restoration of the Wilson House.

• $1.2 million to purchase three lots off Beach Street to preserve as open space.

The committee can also decide to recommend funding a proposal at less than the amount requested.

Approval is a two-step process: first the committee votes to recommend a proposal and then Town Meeting must vote on it.

According to chairman Stuart Ivimey, the town can also borrow money under the statute to be paid off over time through the fund. The committee can also recommend not spending all or part of the money that would then be banked for subsequent years. If a proposal involves borrowing, it would require a two-thirds vote at Town Meeting.

"We can either spend it or set it aside," Ivimey said. Five percent can be set aside for administrative costs that could pay for legal advice from Town Counsel, surveying land, conducting title searches or even paying for stamps.

Ivimey says the committee wants groups to come forward with ideas.

Taxes, character concern Cohasset survey respondents

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The results are in. The Growth and Development Committee has compiled a Master Plan Interim Report that includes the details of a town-wide survey disseminated last November.

Town Planner Liz Harrington said the group received more than 600 responses — well over the 10 percent response rate to make a survey statistically significant.

In the survey, residents were asked to identify and rank issues in several areas including the chief concerns facing Cohasset today, the most and least important issues for Cohasset's future, and what areas Cohasset should act on.

Overwhelmingly, residents identified the town's tax burden as their primary concern. Forty-two percent of respondents ranked the fiscal management of the town as one of their top four issues. The other top concerns were protecting natural resources, the impact of Greenbush, preserving open space, preserving community character, affordable housing, and the quality of services that the town provides.

"Our next phase is identifying key trade offs that need to be made," Harrington said. "Obviously there has to be some give and take when people are concerned about fiscal management but still want to see high quality services."

While many residents are currently concerned about the town's fiscal state, when asked about their concerns in the future, they left little doubt that it's the town's water and natural resources that are paramount.

Six of the top ten issues residents listed for Cohasset's future concerned water resources and wastewater management.

"It is clear that preserving the town's character is very impor-

Book store up for award

Children should be thankful to have Buttonwood Books nearby. The bookstore, located in Shaw's Plaza, was recently nominated for the Pannell Award that recognizes retail booksellers, who excel at creatively bringing books and children together and inspire children's interest in books and reading.

The award, given out by the Women's National Book Association, scours bookstores across the nation and Canada, and groups them into two categories. The first award is for general excellence in a children's bookstore and the second, which Buttonwood is nominated for, honors all bookstores. This year, 15 stores were nominated in the children's bookstore category and 10 were nominated in the general category.

"We have a long term commitment to bringing books and children together," said Betsey Detwiler, president of Buttonwood Books. "We never stop planning events and bringing speakers in to try and get kids interested."

The award is expected to be announced in the beginning of April and all nominees were required to send a portfolio to the judges outlining the reasons they should be selected.

Rail bed fight goes to court

Legislative vote could be required

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

While the Town of Hingham had hoped its lawsuit would stop the train — it may be legal action involving its neighbors to the south that could eventually stall or even halt the project.

At issue is the Greenbush right of way, which Scituate and Cohasset own, and whether that "parkland" can be used for another purpose without first obtaining an affirmative two-thirds vote of the state Legislature.

— news analysis —

If a judge agrees with a lawsuit filed by the anti-Greenbush AfTA (Advocates for Transportation Alternatives) that the eight-mile-long rail bed in Scituate and Cohasset is protected by the state constitution — the question then arises, would there be enough legislators willing to vote against the land transfer to throw a wrench into MBTA plans to build the 17-mile railroad?

To better understand what is transpiring, one has to step back to the early 1990s when the MBTA obtained a general authorization to transfer land for the three legs of the then proposed Old Colony Railroad restoration project as part of a transportation bond bill approved by the legislature. Greenbush has two sister lines, Plymouth and Middleboro, which resumed service in 1997.

But Hingham's John Bewick, president of AfTA and a former state secretary of environmental affairs, says in order to transfer land out of conservation use — the use must be clearly spelled out. In other words, the vote approving the bond bill would have also had to explicitly transfer the conservation land in question to train use. It did not, he said.

So far only Cohasset, which has agreed to a friendly "land taking" of the rail bed by the MBTA for $1.6 million, and the MBTA are named in the AfTA lawsuit. Scituate has not reached an agreement with the MBTA, but will be named in a separate lawsuit if the town goes down the same path that Cohasset has, Bewick said.

"The purpose (of the lawsuit) is to block the sale of land so the MBTA will be forced to use AfTA's more cost-effective alternatives to Greenbush," he said. Those include expanded commuter boats and bus service.

Bewick says Scituate's deed to the rail bed refers to conservation as one of the purposes of the property. The land in Cohasset was taken from train use in the context of a master plan that called for the railroad right of way to be used as a linear connector between the various parklands in Cohasset, he said. Cohasset voters appropriated $140,000 to purchase the right-of-way back in 1981.

Limited freight service continued on the Greenbush Line through Weymouth to Hingham until the late '70s, so those towns

Village sidewalks on display

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Take a look, walk around and see you what you like.

That's what the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private company working in conjunction with the village task force, wants residents to do.

At Tuesday's meeting, selectmen approved a plan that will allow the CRC to construct various sidewalk and light fixtures along the James Brook Walkway which runs from the town parking lot to S. Main Street. They also appropriated $1,000 towards the project, which is expected to cost the CRC around $4,000.

"The CRC feels that additional public awareness and input is needed in the selection of sidewalk materials and light fixtures for the scheduled village reconstruction project," Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, stated in a letter to selectmen.

Selectman Michael Sullivan agreed and felt that displaying the various options could raise awareness.

"This way everyone in town will be able to see what choices they have and make informed decisions," he said.

The sample sidewalks will be constructed on top of the existing James Brook Walkway asphalt surface and will have short ramps installed on either end to ensure that they are handicap accessible. In addition, the CRC wants to temporarily replace the three existing light fixtures that run the length of the walkway with three new styles.

"This way everyone in town will be able to see what choices they have and make informed decisions."
— Selectman Michael Sullivan

There will be a system established where people can pick up information and vote on their preferences.

"These displays will allow members of the community to actually see, touch, feel and walk on the materials under consideration," Rizzo said. "This will be an invaluable opportunity to ensure that the towns' people have as much input as possible in this important decision process."

At previous neighborhood forums, the CRC had constructed samples of different sidewalk options and light fixtures.

"Many in attendance felt that the displays were very helpful and that they should be made accessible for other members of the community to review," Rizzo said.

Water Commission, Feb. 28, 8 p.m. at 339 King St.

Committee on Town History, March 4, 7:30 p.m. at the Lothrop House

Sewer Commission, March 4, 6 p.m.

Meetings are held at Town Hall unless otherwise noted.

Discussion tabled

Because of time restraints and a need for town counsel to further review the articles, the Planning Board tabled discussion on two articles last week.

One concerns accessory dwellings and the other, use variances. The Planning Board plans to take the issues up again at its March 6 meeting.

"I would really like town counsel to mull over these articles before we make a recommendation," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore.

Plaza expansion

The Planning Board discussed Donald Staszko's citizen petition which allow him to seek a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals to expand the Route 3A shopping center anchored by Super Stop & Shop at its meeting last week.

The current article is not the same one Staszko has put in front of Town Meeting in previous years but would have the same result – the potential to expand Stop & Shop and construction of a new retail building.

Under the current bylaw when a district boundary line divides a lot, a use permitted on one portion of the lot may be extended into the other portion by up to 200 feet with a special permit. But this allowance does not apply to property, such as Cohasset Plaza, which is in the watershed protection district. The proposed amendment would lift that restriction and allow the property owner to apply to the Zoning Board for a special permit.

Chairman Al Moore, who has not been in favor of the expansion in the past, said he'd rather see Staszko take another avenue to procure his expansion.

"This could open Pandora's box," he said.

Report available

The 2001 Cohasset Town Report in now available at the Town Clerk's office.

Manager change

Selectmen approved the appointment of Barry Goughan as manager of the Cohasset Golf Club at their meeting Tuesday night. Goughan, who previously managed the club for nine years but left in 2000 when the club underwent renovations, will stay on board until the club completes a search for a new manager. Goughan replaces Denise Carroll.

"Barry (Goughan) is very well qualified to run the club," Selectman Merle Brown said. "He knows the ins and outs of the club."

Sewer project money discussed

The Sewer Commission presented three warrant articles to selectmen Tuesday to mixed reviews. The article that drew the most attention concerned the Little Harbor sewer expansion plan. The Sewer Commission is asking Town Meeting to appropriate approximately $750,000 towards retaining contractors and for design costs.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he wondered where the money was going to come from. His concern centered around the fact that if Town Meeting approves the article but in the future doesn't approve the expansion plan the town will have to pay back the loan in five years. If the town does approve a future article which expands sewering to Little Harbor and Atlanitc Avenue, it will have 20 years to pay back the loan.

Haddad said he needs to meet with the Sewer Commission to discuss these issues.

Selectman Merle Brown said before the Sewer Commission attempts to implement the approximate $9.9 million dollar project the town should take a look at some less expensive approaches.

"I agree something needs to be done but how about looking at improving drainage or taking fertilizer off lawns," he said.

Voters could catch pitch for ball fields

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The town's former "gravel pits" could be transformed into two, new state-of-the-art ball fields for Cohasset kids at a cost of about $400,000.

Voters at the March 30 Town Meeting will be asked to appropriate a total $300,000 that would pay for 3/4 of the cost of constructing the facility off North Main Street behind Barnes Field. If voters approve, part of that money would come from the Community Preservation Fund.

The balance of $100,000 would be raised privately through Cohasset Little League.

Plans are to construct a baseball field and a softball field with additional parking and a refreshment stand.

"The hope is that the fields will be used to the max."
— Mark DeGiacomo, study committee

Mark DeGiacomo, member of the Gravel Pits Reuse Committee, which was formed two years ago, said the group weighed many options when considering what to do with the site.

"The gravel pits are a dangerous place and have been an eyesore for some time," he said. "We considered a sewer treatment area, elderly housing and other options for the area but eventually thought ball fields would be the best fit."

DeGiacomo said there is shortage of field space around town, a situation that has been exacerbated with construction at the middle-high school. Plans are to use the fields for some middle school and junior varsity softball games as well as for Little League games.

"The hope is that the fields will be used to the max," DeGiacomo said. The design also incorporates 80 spaces into the complex that would help eliminate parking during games on North Main Street, which has been a chronic problem.

"We'd like to see no cars parked on North Main Street," DeGiacomo said. "The overflow parking will be able to park at the swim center."

The Community Preservation Committee, formed under the Community Preservation Act that Cohasset adopted last year is considering recommending Town Meeting appropriate money from the Community Preservation Fund for the project. The preservation committee meets March 4 to vote on its recommendations to Town Meeting. The account consists of money from a 1-1/2 percent real estate tax surcharge and matching funds from the state.

The fields proposal before the preservation committee is for $200,000. If the committee recommends $100,000 on March 4, then the town will be asked to pick up the other $200,000 in a separate article.

"The town can definitely afford this project," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. He explained even if the Community Preservation Committee decides not to recommend the $100,000, the town would still be able to pay for the project.

"We'd love the money from the CPC but we'll be able to work something out if they don't," Haddad said.

DeGiacomo expects the project will provide the town with the nicest fields in the South Shore.

"Right now, no one has a better field than Barnes field and we're trying to up the ante," he said.

Plug could be pulled on Little League payphone

As cell phones become increasingly popular, family members are able to stay in touch 24 hours a day, motorists who are in trouble can call for help, and businesses prosper by having employees available at all times.

However, payphones have suffered from the cell phone explosion and may become an endangered species.

Verizon, the telephone company that owns several payphones around town, is concerned with the trend and said it may have to remove at least one payphone from the town because of declining revenues.

"The growth of wireless services has caused substantial reductions of payphone usage," Verizon stated in a letter to the town. "The changes have had an impact of the ability of our payphones to generate revenues to cover their costs."

Payphones are currently paid for in a variety of ways. The two most common practices involve a town, or a company or other entity, paying a monthly fee for the service and collecting the profit from the phone, or a telephone company paying for the phone and collecting the revenues itself.

The payphone that may be taken out is at the Little League field at 168 N. Main St. Verizon stated in the letter that if Cohasset wishes to keep the phone as it must start paying a monthly service rate plus taxes and other surcharges. If the town doesn't reply within 30 days, the payphone will be removed.

Selectmen addressed the issue at their meeting Tuesday night and decided to send a letter to Verizon indicated that the placement of that phone is not necessarily to generate revenue, it's for safety reasons.

Verizon says the Little League payphone is a revenue loser.

"We're expanding the little league fields so there's going to be more people in the area," Selectman Merle Brown said. He added that the additional people could spend more money on the phone and as well, safety may become more of an issue.

Mark DeGiacomo, member of the Gravel Pits Reuse Committee, which is in the process of designing two new ball fields for the area, said his main concern if the phone was to be removed is safety. He said during games, the snack bar has a phone and there are always cell phones handy however, during pick up games that may not be the case.

"When kids are just playing there with no supervision it's important they be able to call 911 should there be an emergency," he said. "It has happened in the past."

Verizon has been evaluating the performance of its payphones to identify those phones that do not meet the minimum monthly revenue requirements and under its contract, reserves the right to remove the phones.

Paul Bowman, spokesman for Verizon, said the company is exploring other avenues to generate revenue.

"We're looking into providing internet access and other services at our phones," he said. "We need to make using a payphone more attractive."
